

ANOTHER CURE.

A sick woman, the wife of a soldier, had undergone an operation, before coming to us, but the Doctor found her so ill that he brought her to our hospital and told her husband that he must operate again, although with very little chance of success. There was no great risk involved, since according to the opinions of the Doctors, she could not live long, in the state in which she was.

At the moment of her arrival in the Hospital, I had just received a photograph of Mother Gamelin. I had an inspiration to place it in the sick woman's room. For I knew she was Irish and a fervent Catholic. After having communicated to her, the cures attributed to the powerful intercession in heaven, of our dear Mother Foundress, I said to her :

"Have confidence, Madame, we are going to begin a Novena to Our Lady of the Seven Dolours, and Mother Gamelin must obtain your cure, without having to undergo an operation.

Our confidence was not in vain. The patient was soon conscious of a sensible improvement, and the astonished Doctor did not know to what to attribute so extraordinary a change. At the present time, the sick woman is well, and cannot sufficiently thank her benefactress.

Glory and love to the venerated Mother Gamelin.
