Winter Evenings

Some evening when you gather your inner circle of friends around you, "go into committee of the whole' and consider the most attractive pharacter with whom you have been whole and consider the most actractive character with whom you have become acquainted among your book friends. I formed one of such a circle friends. I formed one of such a circle a few evenings ago. One sister had been reading "The Deemster," by Hall Caine, and con-

One brother who was a Dickens' lover, said that Sydney Carton, in the 'Trale of Two Cities." was his choice. Another preferred Dame Burden of Bleak House, "another Florence Dombey, while Little Dorrit and John Storm from Hall Caine's "Christian" had warm champions. Dickens furnished most of the favorites.

had warm champions. Dickens furnished most of the favorites.

Another evening can be devoted to telling what we consider the most repulsive characters. Again Dickens comes to the front. Quilo. Pecksnift. Uriah Heep. Fagin and Sikes come to mind. Then Thackeray comes with Beckey Sharp, The Campaigner, and others.

Many consider Thackeray's "Colonel Newcombe" as one of the most attractive.—"Rob Roy." . . .

Those Automobilists

Does the law of this country give Does the law of this country give the man who sits in an automobile the privilege of monopolizing our country roads and of making us minor individuals take the ditch? I have been forced so often of late to go off the road that I helped to build in order that the cive gue with an go off the road that I helped to build in order that the city guy with an automobile might stay right in the centre, that my temper is up. Were I given to profanity what I would say about them would never be allowed to appear in Farm and Dairy. When automobiles first appeared on our roads our horses were frightened to death of them. We have now overcome that difficulty, but really it is very humiliating to our pride to have to give way every time to those city people who think they own all creation. When glancing over the Saturday Globe last week I see that I am not the only one whose temper is not smooth when automobiles are mentioned. Peter McArthur, whose weekly letter I always look for, quotes a little bit of poetry that pretty nearly expresses my opinion of nearly expresses my opinion of auto drivers :

They are neither man nor woman,

"They are neither man nor woman, They are neither brute nor human, They are ghouls." It seems to me that we should be able to get laws that would make autos keep a reasonable speed and also to give half the road to the man who made it. How would it be to put a higher tax on autor canable of made it. How would it be to put a higher tax on autor capable of going over 15 miles an hour than on the smaller machines? If a man buys a machine that will go 50 miles an hour you can bet your both the binds to push the machine to the limit somewhere. Probably on some nice stretch of country road with no "cops" around.

I was giving the boss my opinion on the subject, but he said that it did not matter how much we farmers kicked that the city people always got the best of it.

The only kicking I ever heard him do was to his neighbors. If he and they would kick at the proper time and in the proper place they would receive more attention.—"Another Hired Man."
