After some further explanations, they gave him a clearance in due form, but upon going on board his vessel, Capt. C. was informed by an officer that if he went to sea he would be fired into by the Cutter. As he did not consider this notification as official, not receiving any written and sealed document to that effect, he proceeded on the 6th inst. to sea ; but was stopped in the harbor by the Cutter and ordered to anchor, which he refused to. The Cutter then sent off a bost and overbauled the papers, acknowledging they were legal, but refused to allow the vesse to pass. Chickahominy: —
The first rebel line was held by Breckinridge's troops and was carried, but Lee is too good a General to leave a point so important thus weekdefended. Breckinridge's men were placed in the fore-front to receive the baptism of fire, but behind these lay the veterans of Hill's corps and it is these we now see dashing forward to retrive the honors we had snatched. Barlow's brigades -stout hearts not used to pale before the great est odds-could have held their own under conditions the least short of desparation, but the situation in which they now found themselves, overleaped its limits. It was not merely the overwhelming front that came pressing down upon them, of that they had no fear, but the position they had gained placed them in advance of the whole line of battle, and gave the rebel artillery the opportunity for a deadly enfilading fire. Besides this, they had lost the directing heads of two of the chief commanders. Brooks and Byrnes, "souls of courage all compact" fell mor-tally wounded, and all the organizations had suffered fearfully from an unparalleledgloss of offi-cers. In this state of facts they tell back, bringing with them the prisoners they had taken and captured color, but not the guns. Parts of the brigades of Tyler and Dwen gained the rebel works, but for reasons identical with those that forced back Barlow's troops, they were also compelled to give up what they had won. Gibbon's division, too, lost very heavily. Gen. Tyler, be fore reaching the works, was carried off the field, shot in the ankle. One of his regimental com-manders, Col. Porter, of the Eighth New York the Lieut. Col. (Bates) fell dead. Another of his regimental commanders, Col. McMahon, of the One Hundred and Sixty-forth New York. the One Hundred and Sixty-forth New York, was struck while planting his colors on the rebel works, and was left a prisoner in the enemy's hands—his troops not supporting him after he was wounded. Owen's brigade lost two entire companies taken prisoners inside of the enemy's litterchange ments.

Not until the splendid attack of Hancock's corps had been made, not till after its blood-bought victory had been wrested from our hands, was he or any man in this army aware of the supreme importance of the position this morning carried and lost. The key-point in the battle of Gaines's Mills, two years ago, it is strange and mortifying that no one should have appresand mortifyin battle ground, and covering the angle of the "Dispatch Road." Along this ridge the rebel works formed a salient, and in front of it was a works formed a salient, and in front of it was a had a position whence the entire rebel line might have been enfiladed; and I think it is not too much to say that the day would have been ours, and Lee pushed across the Chickshominy. There was a passage of romance after this attack. When the musketry had subsided for the night, a Confederate band approached our lines, serenading our skirmishers with the songs of the Confederacy, and cheers from the enemy were mingled with the music.
One of our bands, in response, was sent out to the front to refresh the enemy with the tunes they used to hear and love—the Star Spangled Banner and Hail Columbia.

War is a game of Mathematics; Grant needs superior numbers to hold his opponent who is belind entrenchments; and in proportion to three times, at least, as many as he has to meet. The Army and Navy journal says if the Administration meet the crisis with vigor there can be no failure, but let resources be withheld "and the army will have to add one more to the chapter of golden opportunities lost forever."

This journal thus states the position of the two armies, now on the edge of the battle: Grant's position as facing Lee is one en echelon—his left thrown forward to Mechanicsville—his right withdrawn to White House—his reserve massed on the Chickahominy, in rear of his left between Mechanicsville and Bottom bridge. Lee occu-pies the position from which Branch was driven in the battle of Hanover Court House, and from which Jackson advanced to the attack of Gaine's They informed the captain that they intended to Mill." The Sentinel of the 3d announces the arrival of 850 Yankee prisoners on Friday at Libby prison. The Sentinel says 14 assaults were made on their lines on Friday, all of which were repulsed with great slaughter, the Confederates escaping almost unharmed. Probably no action so important in its character was ever crowded in so brief a space of time ten terrible minutes in the early dawn developing on the part of the enemy such strength, both of position and force as to carry conviction that any victory that could here be achieved would be purchased at too great a cost." The New York Tribune does not take this view of this battle.
