

Give.
See the rivers flowing Downward to the sea,
Pouring all their treasures, Bountiful and free!
Yet to ship their gifts, Hidden springs arise.
Oh, if dead be, showers Flood them from the skies.
With their princely fervor, Their rich fragrance spread, Load the air with perfume, Press their beauty shed!
Yet their lavish spending, Leaves them not in dearth, With fresh life replenished
By their mother earth!
Give their heart's best treasures, Give their Nature's tears;
Give love and sympathy, Wait not for return!
And the more thou spendest
From thy little store,
With a double bounty,
God will give thee more.

A Happy Woman.
What spectacle more pleasing does the world afford than a happy woman contented in her sphere, ready at all times to benefit her little world by her charities, and transforming the briars and thorns of life into roses of Paradise by the magic of her touch? There are those who are thus happy because they cannot help it — no misfortunes dampen their sweet smiles, and they diffuse a cheerful glow around them, as they pass the earth in their way. They have the secret of the contentment which rains in above the philosopher's stone; for without seeking the base exchange of gold, which may buy some sort of pleasure, they convert everything they touch into joy. What their condition is makes no difference. They may be rich or poor, high or low, admitted or forsaken by the world; but the sparkling fountain of happiness bubbles up in their hearts and makes them radiantly beautiful. Though they live in a log cabin, they make it shine with lustre that kings and queens may covet, and they make wealth a fountain of blessing to the children of poverty.
Happy women give the highest type of humanity, and we cannot say how much we owe to them or the progress of the race.

How the Crickets Brought Good Fortune.
My friend Jacques went into a baker's shop one day to buy a little cake which he had fancied in passing. He intended it for a child whose appetite was gone, and who could be soothed only by something nice. He thought that such a pretty loaf might tempt even the child. While he waited for his change, a little boy or eight years old, in a poor, but perfectly clean, clean coat, entered the baker's shop. "Ma'am," said he to the baker's wife, "mother sent me for a loaf of bread." The woman climbed upon the counter (she happened in a country town), took from the shelf of four-pound loaves the best one she could find, and put it into the arms of the little boy.
"My friend Jacques then first observed the thin and thoughtful face of the little fellow. It contrasted strangely with the round, open countenance of the gray loaf, of which he was taking the greatest care.
"Have you any money?" said the baker's wife.
"No, ma'am," said he, begging the loaf closer to his thin blouse; "but mother told me to say that she would come and speak to you about it to-morrow."
"Run along," said the good woman; "carry your loaf home, child."
"Thank you, ma'am," said the poor little fellow.
My friend Jacques came forward for his money.
He had put his purchase into his pocket and was about to go when he found the child with the loaf, whom he had supposed to be half way home, standing still and looking at him.
"What are you doing there?" said the baker's wife to the child, whom she also had thought to be fairly off. "Don't you like the bread?"
"O yes, ma'am," said the child.
"Well, then," said his mother, my little friend, "if you will say longer, she will bring you home by the way, and you will get a scolding."
The child did not seem to hear. Something else absorbed his attention.
The baker's wife went up to him, and gave him a friendly pat on the shoulder. "What are you thinking about?" said she.
"Ma'am," said the little boy, "What is that sings?"
"There is no singing," said she.
"Yes," cried the little fellow. "Hear it—Queek, queek, queek, queek!" My friend and the woman both listened, but they could hear nothing, unless it was the song of the cricket, frequent guests in baker's houses.
"It is a little bird," said the dear little fellow, "or perhaps the bread sings when it bakes in apples do."
"No, indeed, little goosey!" said the baker's wife; "there are crickets. They sing in the bakerhouse because we are lighting the oven, and they like to see the fire."
"Crickets!" said the child; "are they really crickets?"
"Yes, to be sure," said she, good-humoredly.
The child's face lighted up.
"My friend," said he, blushing at the boldness of his remark, "I would like it very much if you would give me a cricket."
"A cricket?" said the baker's wife, smiling;
"what in the world would you do with a cricket, my little friend? I would gladly give you all there are in the house to get rid of them, they run about so."
"O ma'am, give me one, only one, if you please!" said the child, clasping his little thin hands under the big loaf. "They say that crickets bring good luck into houses; and perhaps if we had one at home, mother, who has so much trouble, wouldn't cry any more."
"Why does your poor mamma cry?" said my friend, who could no longer help joining in the conversation.
"On account of her bill, sir," said the little fellow. "Father is dead, and mother works very hard, but she cannot pay them all." My friend took the child, and with him the great loaf, into his arms, and I really believed he kissed them both. Meanwhile, the baker's wife, who did not dare to touch a cricket here, and who went into the bakerhouse. She made her husband catch four, and put them into a box with holes in the cover, so that they might breathe. She gave the box to the child, who was ever so perfectly happy.
When he had gone, the baker's wife and my friend got up other good requests of the baker. "Four more loaves," said they, both in earnest. "Then there were the mother's charges written, made against each of them down the page and then, at the bottom, "Paid." Meanwhile, my friend, to lose no time, had put up in paper all the money in his pockets, where fortunately he had quite a sum that day, and had begged the good wife to send it to the mother of the little cricket boy, with her best wishes, and a note, which he told her she should send to her mother's house, and she should be very glad to be her joy and pride.
They gave it to a baker's boy with long locks, and told him to make haste to the child, with his big loaf, his four crickets, and his little loaf, would not run very far, by that when he reached home, he found his mother, for the first time in many weeks, with her eyes shining with joy, and a smile of peace and happiness upon her lips.
The boy believed that it was the arrival of his four little black things which had worked this miracle, and I do not believe he was mistaken.
Without the crickets, and his good little loaf, would this happy change have taken place in his mother's fortunes?—From the French of P. J.

Rhubarb Fudding.
During the season of plant, rhubarb is common enough, but has it come to be known generally that puddings made of the material are quite safe, perhaps superior, to rhubarb pie? I think not, having seen one at a restaurant, and it was very good.
Select good, fair-sized rhubarb stalks; cut them into lengths, say eight inches long; remove all that is stringy of the bark, then lay out on a table a clean towel or any white cloth, place a cut of the plant at one end, and roll the cloth over it. Then, add another stalk, and make another roll. And continue until you have rolled up a dozen rhubarb stalks, each one separated from the other by a thickness of cloth. Tie the roll tightly, and boil briskly fifteen minutes in salt water enough to cover the whole.
Have ready a batch of dough, made up as if for short, light biscuits. Roll out a large sheet of the dough, sprinkle it liberally with fine white sugar, and roll the dough over it. Proceed thus until the stacks are all rolled in, just as they were in the cloth. Then you require to have an extra coating of white sugar as an envelope, and place the roll in a wide mouthed pudding-bag, which is place in a steamer, and steam away as vigorously as you will for an hour and a half.
The pudding is done to be served hot, and may be eaten with any of the ordinary sauces.

Comperance.
From the Montreal Witness.
There's a stone in the Path, That's a stone in the path, intersecting the way;
And around it is death and disease, and gloom; In its shadow is misery, and in its light is hope; the hope of the father, and food of the mother; it is a stone in the path, and it is a stone in the path, and it is a stone in the path, it is the birth-place of sorrow—the home of de-pair.
The grave-yard of virtue—where love, and forgetfulness, and the wreath of fair prospects lie scattered and torn.
To the wayfarer launch'd on the journey of life,
Its lure is seductive—its danger, its peril;
The hope of the father, and food of the mother;
The hope of the father, and food of the mother;
Nash its moorings there lurks a reptilian brood, At war with the spotless, the pure and the good; Fair woman—the idol of savage and sage—Is not even free from their pestilential There, Satan incarnate, presides o'er the clan, And prostrate brute-nature debases the man—Kneels o'er the fallen with merciless glee; Alike, they are strangers to honor and shame, The victim themselves, asking, oh, where is While sliding aside to the mad-house or grave, And sparing the hand that would venture to save!
When God, in his wisdom, has pointed the way To move the obstruction, shall we in dismay Look silently on, and not dare to be free?
In a land where the law is the people's decree; Forbid it high Heaven! That man shall be mum While the stone in the path is the traffic in ruin, Its power most woe-wear, and its prestige—ah!
By a long pull, a strong pull, and a pull together,
To strike at the network where only life plays, At writhing the thistle, to make it decay—
To top off the branches were useless and vain, While the trunk of the spire is still to remain, Renewing its strength from surrounding despair,
And its foul exhalations infecting the air, Distributing ruin, disaster andbane, A scourge and a blight over valley and plain.
Then brothers and sisters nearer to the work;
No longer in criminal apathy lurk;
The prospect inspiring—the labour's divine, Nageth in sin, and impugns a god;
While the few still compare to the many—ah!
The friends to the traffic are foes to mankind;
And though demons may thwart us the angels will smile,
As we root out the stone from Acadian soil.

Intemperance and Crime.
The following facts in regard to the intimate relation between intemperance and crime are touching, reliable, and in most cases, official testimony. Of 1706 persons who were arrested by the police in Albany during the months 1300, or more than three-fourths, were known to be intemperate. Of 1124 convicts in the penitentiary of the same city, 1024, or 90 per cent., were notoriously intemperate. A gentleman who had visited most of the prisons in the United States, and had much personal conference with the prisoners, says he has not found more than twenty who did not acknowledge that they had been addicted to the use of strong drinks. Of 100 convicts in the Connecticut State Prison, 136, or 85 per cent., were in the habit of using ardent spirits. An official visitation of the county jails in New York, in 1856, showed that in forty-seven of them, at least three-fourths of the prisoners were by their own admission intemperate. In the judgment of the visitors, two-thirds of the remainder were really so, making three-fourths of the whole. The conclusion from the examination of the Penitentiary and the Albany Prison in New York, was, that in each case, more than three-fourths of the inmates were intemperate.
In 1850, out of every seven drunkards in the state of New York, was one—of crime, while only one out of every six intemperate was guilty of a breach of the law. The 20,000 in-Good Way to keep Smoked Hams.

Good hams, well cured and well preserved are very convenient to have in the house. They are wholesome food, and are always ready to hand for other meats are absent, or when a hurried, impromptu meal is needed. In our travels this summer we have eaten ham in a good many places, at the hotels and elsewhere—some very poor, full of salt and smoke, and then tried a crisp, and some very good, sweet and tender, fresh, and just cooked through. The best was met with at St. John's, N. Y., where we had in a condition to enjoy a good repeat quickly got up. We enjoyed the process of curing they were put in in the usual manner last Fall or Winter, and when just fairly salted through, they were moderately smoked. They were now out into slices all ready for the table, and were half-cooked. The pieces were then packed down into stone jars, and the lid poured out over them. When there was not fat enough fried out to cover them, some melted lard was added. The crocks were covered and set away, and whenever ham is wanted, it is only necessary to take a few slices and cook them in the oven, in less than five minutes and the cooking is done. It is a very convenient and cheap way to keep hams, and it is a very good way to keep them. It is a very good way to keep them, and it is a very good way to keep them.
By the above method of preserving, the salted ham is not only cured, but it is also cured of its disease, and it is a very good way to keep them. It is a very good way to keep them, and it is a very good way to keep them.
