A Kick About Coal Quality

is by no means a rare thing these times. But it is a rarity with us, because we take care to buy only the best grades of coal, as we know our customers would not buy from us any inferior qualities— not twice anyway. At it is our policy to keep our customers, we could not afford to give them any but the best coal, full weight, without dirt or rubbish and at a reasonable price.

The Cash Intrigue

By George Randolph Chester
(Copyright, 1909, by the Bobbs-Merrill Co.)

Her eyes spoke her gratitude as she looked up at him, and she spoke of something else—at least so Rensselaer judged as he came upon them. On their way home Rensselaer, who had resumed his ranch business in the residence of a ranch friend, spoke of the girl. "Miss White is a beautiful young woman, beautiful in mind as well as in face and figure," he declared. "She has developed remarkably," admitted Kelvin. "She was a little girl whose top dress when I boarded at left house. Even then I thought her pretty, but I never suspected that she would become such a beautiful woman."

"She is much more than beautiful," insisted Rensselaer. "She is the sort of woman who would spend her whole life in the endeavor to make her husband happy, and she would succeed. I would swear that she is of even temper and unflinching steadfastness. Moreover, she is intelligent enough to keep pace with her husband, no matter what his progress."

"She is a fine girl," admitted Kelvin. "Isn't it startling, though, to think how much her mother must have looked like her at the same age?"

"No," stoutly maintained Rensselaer. "Her mother is only a pitiful example of what worry and hard work and damnable poverty will do for a woman. Right now the girl would marry you in a minute, and you would insure yourself a life of happiness."

"You have rather a romantic imagination, Bert," laughed Phillip, whereupon Rensselaer gave up the topic with disgust.

It did not take long for the street to know that there was a new "bear" influence at work. When on the first morning some twenty stocks were sold up 1,000 share lots no attention was paid. When, however, on the second and third and fourth mornings the day's business was opened by the offer of 1,000 shares of each of these stocks the coincidence began to be noticed, and when the same phenomenon occurred on the fifth and sixth and seventh mornings it began to be not a coincidence, but a design, and all the floor was talking of it.

The stocks had been disposed of when a certain "bull" coterie of the railroad crowd, scenting here a deliberate attempt to force the market, combined in a more or less aggressive counter attack and within another week did actually succeed in forcing up the entire line some ten points.

This action, however, had no effect upon Phillip Kelvin. Every morning he sold the monotonous 1,000 shares of each of the twenty stocks which had been chosen for attack. On the day that the bull movement had forced stocks the highest Galleon remonstrated.

"Look here, Mr. Kelvin," said he; "you are bucking up against some of the biggest men on the street, a group of half a dozen men, each of whom could probably swallow you whole in a financial way. If they get after you scalp I'm afraid you are in for losing a tremendous amount of money."

"You have everything margined fifty points?"

"Yes. But I have known this same group to manipulate the market to a seventy point rise."

Young Kelvin was quite complacent about it. "They are doing me a service," said he. "The margins I have put up on the stocks previously bought are ample. They are not going to force prices far enough to make you call for more margin, but if they do the margin will be forthcoming. In the meantime, however, they are enabling me to sell at a much higher price. They are playing my own game for me."

"I presume you know your own business," returned Galleon dryly, "but remember that I have warned you."

"And remember that I have warned you!" retorted Kelvin. "Be sure you keep my cash in a safe place, and do not intrust it to a bank. In normal times a bank is a safer place than a hole in the ground for money, but not in these times."

REMEMBER THAT I HAVE WARNED YOU!

"Except for the one trifle that currency is a little tight, I see no cloud on the horizon."

"I am a better financial weather prophet for this one time than the Wall Street Journal," declared Phillip confidently. "In a very few days I will show you a cloud that will cover this entire district like a blanket of mid night. I know something, I tell you. This was the fourth or fifth time since he had first come into the office that young Kelvin had ventured such dire predictions, and in spite of the fact that, except for the growing scarcity of actual currency, there was no hint or trace of trouble to come. Henry Galleon began to be a trifle impressed by them, so much so that he began speaking of the matter to others of his kind. In the offices of Raleigh & Raleigh, of Wilde & Co., of Bonker & Watson and of R. F. Eldridge, the other brokerage concerns that were doing as Kelvin's agents, Phillip dropped the same, and from these five centers, aided by Rensselaer, there gradually radiated a note of inquiry. Was the market in a really healthy condition? Was there an impending crash? No one could tell.

In the meantime Kelvin steadily sold his twenty stocks in 1,000 share lots. He became known as the "cash bear," and there were a dozen conflicting stories as to how he had got his money.

Young Eldridge took a great fancy to him and before he had been on the market a week had him in at Kerry's for dinner with a lot of the big boys of the market. It was discovered that Kelvin distinctly knew how to comport himself in any company. The only thing of note he said that that dinner was that he confidently looked very shortly for the biggest crash in the history of the street. They heard this remark in amused silence, but in the main they liked him. Rollins, one of the conservatives of the railroad group and of vast experience, was the only one who studied Kelvin seriously.

"On what do you base that queer prophecy?" he wanted to know.

"I'm not ready to tell you just yet," returned Phillip, smiling, "but it is coming."

"I know why," put in Pellman, one of the more reckless operators of the railroad group. "It's because our young friend is on the short side of the market for all the real cash in the country. There must come a panic."

"You were quite content to laugh at Kelvin. He was necessarily 'green,' being young and new to the street. Rollins got Phillip to one side after the dinner.

"I'm very curious about the slump you predict," he said. "I hope it's true. I want to buy some railroad stock, and it can't go any too low to suit me."

Phillip looked at him in musing silence. He liked Rollins, a clean, well set up man, with a clean life and an honest one written all over him.

"You buy outright only, I believe, Mr. Rollins," he observed.

"Outright only," replied Rollins.

"Then wait. There will be some bargains by and by," declared Phillip, so seriously that Rollins was impressed.

Kevin had been in the market more than a month, steadily selling all that time, when one evening in a private dining room with almost the same crowd Rollins found that he had no cash and sent down a check to the manager with a request that he send up the currency. The manager himself came up with the check in hand and very much worried.

"Very sorry, Mr. Rollins," said he, "but I have not the currency in the house. We have had no currency for several days. I don't know why it is, but there seems to be a tremendous scarcity of cash."

"What seems to be the matter?"

"I don't know," responded the manager. "Trade was never better. Our regular customers seem to have plenty of money, but no currency. I don't believe I have seen a thousand dollars in cash in a week, except what I drew myself for our payroll here."

"That seems to be a general complaint," remarked Pellman after the manager had left the room. "There is a scarcity of money everywhere. Yesterday my check was refused at two hotels. I don't understand it."

"Within the past year nearly a billion dollars of actual currency has been entirely withdrawn from circulation."

"They were slow to understand how this could be."

"I have seen no mention of such a withdrawal," urged Pellman. "Where and how has this amount of money disappeared?"

"In bread," declared Kelvin. "The one commodity in this country which must invariably be for sale in cash is the five-cent loaf of bread."

A short laugh ran around the board.

GRANDMA NEVER LET HER HAIR GET GRAY

Kept Her Locks Dark, Thick, Glossy, With Sage Tea and Sulphur.

When you darken your hair with Sage Tea and Sulphur, no one can tell, because it's done so naturally, so evenly. Preparing this mixture, though, at home is messy and trouble some. For 50 cents you can buy at any drug store the ready-to-use tonic called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Remedy." You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning all gray hair disappears, and, after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy and luxuriant. You will also discover dandruff is gone and hair has stopped falling.

Gray, faded hair, though no disgrace, is a sign of old age, and as we all desire a youthful and attractive appearance, get busy at once with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur and look years younger. Agent T. George Bowles.

SITUATION IS STILL GRAVE IN DUBLIN

Famine Prices Soar—More Vessels Tied Up.

LONDON, Oct. 22.—In spite of the temporary relief afforded by the food ships from England, Dublin's working class population is in parlous plight. The stores are running low, but fresh supplies are on the way.

Sir George Askwith's outspoken denunciation of the sympathetic strike as a double edged weapon seems to have averted any fear that the English Transport Union will adopt this method of indirect pressure. But individual trade unions are pouring in their contributions to the Dublin fund and on Thursday the total stood at twelve thousand five hundred pounds.

All this will go to relieve the sufferings of one hundred thousand famished and shivering men, women and children gathered round the doors and were admitted in small groups. They soon returned with well-filled parcels of provisions tucked away under shawls or aprons. Thousands were fed in this way.

Supplies of coal have passed through the city under full escort. Famine prices have been created by the Dublin markets. Last week only forty-six boxes of fish were landed as against 1,078 boxes in the corresponding week last year, and the prices obtained are far beyond the reach of poor dealers.

An ocean going craft owned by an Irish firm of ship owners was on her arrival at Dublin on Wednesday morning from Hamburg, promptly added to the "hung-up" list. This was the S.S. City of Cologne, owned by Messrs. Palgrave, Murphy and Co., and she took her place beside her undischarged sister, the S.S. City of Myslen, and thereby swelled the "waiting list" of craft in the port.

The Shipping Federation's boat, Lady Jocelyn, has left the Thames for an unknown port, with only her crew on board. Rumor connected her departure with the Dublin dispute, and said she would pick up non-union laborers at a port on her way. The Lady Jocelyn played a similar part in the Thames-side strike of last year.

There is talk of evictions, but one refuses to believe that starving women and children will be turned out of their homes in this unkind weather, however serious the situation may be for the employer. Such inhumanity would be universally execrated.

Mr. Gosling of the Dockers' Union, one of the delegates from the Trade Union Congress, has returned to London. He says that in Dublin girls of fifteen are employed at half a crown a week and married women at five shillings. The laborer who gets a pound a week is clever. Rents ran higher than in London by one-third in the poorer districts, and for two or three families to occupy one room is not a rarity. But the birth rate is high and the spectacle of young girls clothed in nothing but a ragged dress is only too familiar, says Mr. Gosling, for the families are large and the means almost nil. The price of food is appallingly high.

Sir George Askwith, who presided at the recent inquiry, left Dublin on Wednesday for London. The employees are still considering the report.

Eastbourne's £10,000 Park

The proposed purchase of the Devonshire Park Estate by the Eastbourne Corporation for £10,000 was again before the council on Monday, when petitions signed by 3,485 in favor and 3,219 against were presented. It was stated that the company contemplated closing the baths during the winter.

The Conditions

In a Household Prior to Admirals Death.

PLYMOUTH, Mass., Oct. 21.—Conditions in the household of Rear Admiral Joseph Giles Eaton, prior to his death by poison last March, were described by neighbors at the trial of Mrs. Jennie May Eaton, the widow to-day.

Mrs. Charles M. Hill, testified to conversations with Mrs. Eaton in which the defendant had said that the admiral was deranged and that she feared he would poison her mother. The Eatons always appeared friendly to each other. Mrs. Hill said when cross-examined.

Mrs. William Magoun told the court of a strange preparation which Eaton said the admiral had mixed for June, her daughter by a former marriage. The mixture, according to the witness' remembrance of what Mrs. Eaton had told her, contained soap, vinegar, and either pepper or salt. This testimony caused Mrs. Eaton to smile.

BURGLARS POSE AS DETECTIVE

After Assisting in a Robbery They Telephoned for the Police.

LONDON, Oct. 22.—Representing himself as a detective, a burglar gained the confidence of a servant, and he and two accomplices robbed the master's rooms. The three men—Charles Octave Aucourt, thirty-eight; George Rogers, twenty-six; and John Jones, twenty-three—were charged with breaking into a flat at Belsize Park Gardens, and stealing silver worth £150.

Mr. Lawless, prosecuting, said that for several months Aucourt had been keeping company with Hilda Bensley, who was employed at the flat. On Sept. 12 she was left in charge, and that night the girl and Aucourt who had gained her confidence by representing that he was a detective, went about together, and frequented several public-houses.

Aucourt was entrusted with her purse, in which she kept the key of the flat. He left her for some time and the suggestion was that he took the opportunity to join Jones and Rogers and commit the offence. On her return Miss Bensley discovered the robbery.

Aucourt was with her, and counsel said that it showed what a clever man he was when he telephoned for the police. Aucourt subsequently stayed the night at the flat.
