

Pre-adamite Monsters.
In the Central Park, New York, the foundations have been laid for a paleontological museum. The building is to consist of a large hall with smaller rooms, which are to be used for cabinets of fossils and other geological specimens. In the large hall it is proposed to place a group of pre-adamite monsters, comprising various species once inhabiting the American continent, but which became extinct ages before the creation of man, modelled the size of life.

It is well known that the remains of many extinct varieties of animals have been found on this continent. Everybody has read of the mastodon, a quadruped larger than the elephant, the bones of which are abundant all over the United States, not less than five perfect skeletons having been dug up, of which three were from the fresh water marshes of Orange Co. But the mastodon is comparatively a modern creature, belonging to the post-glacial period according to geologists the last period of the earth's existence previous to the creation of man. The age of the earth prior to the advent of the human race not being reckoned by years, but by periods, it is difficult to say how long it is since those huge beasts roamed the earth; but it is estimated that somewhere from 31,000 to 380,000 years ago mastodons were quite common in this vicinity. In reckoning geological time people are not particular as to a thousand centuries or so, and authorities differ somewhat in reckoning periods to years. As has been said, perfect skeletons of the mastodon have been found, that animal being of comparatively modern origin; but other remains belonging to much earlier periods, that have been discovered, in consequence of their greater age, have generally been in an imperfect condition, sometimes consisting only of a few fragments of bones. Now when any one has only a fragment of fossil skeleton in order to find out what kind of an animal the bones belonged to, it is necessary to apply the principles of comparative anatomy, the science which treats of the structures and relations of the organs in the various branches of the animal kingdom. As a skilled anatomist who should be shown two or three parts of a locomotive could at once tell where they belonged and their uses, and go to work and build up a complete machine which should at once be in perfect proportion to the pieces of iron or steel given him for a guide, so the comparative anatomist from a thigh bone or a few fragments of a skeleton will build up the whole structure of the animal. This is called restoring a specimen, and the drawing or model when completed a restoration.

Professor Hawkins has completed the restoration of the skeleton of a pre-adamite creature or lizard, called the Hesperosaurus, which is supposed to have flourished in the region now occupied by the state of New Jersey some millions of years ago, more or less; also, the models for a complete restoration of the same reptile. This creature lived in a period far anterior to that of the mastodon. Its remains were found in the green sand or gravel at Haddonfield, N. J., and it is supposed that nearly the entire skeleton is in existence, though in the hands of different parties; many important parts having been found and taken away by individuals who did not know their value. This specimen, as restored, measured 26 feet in length, including its tail, which is long and flat like that of an alligator. Near Newport, N. J., the remains of a much larger specimen of the same species have been found, and Prof. Hawkins intends to make a complete restoration of this, which will measure 36 feet in length. The Keyport lizard when standing erect on its hind legs, with its head and body raised at an angle of 45 degrees or thereabouts, would be 21 feet high; the articulation of the thigh bone is ten feet from the ground. A clear view of the figure, the size of the hindquarters may be formed, when it is considered that if four men, each six feet in height, were to stand abreast fashion, one above the other, the head of the highest man would be just on a level with the head of the reptile standing in the position already described. The Hesperosaurus was a Grannate, subsisting entirely upon vegetable diet.

The neighbourhood of Haddonfield has also furnished fossil remains of another singular creature called the Lepidosaurus, an animal in some respects resembling a kangaroo, eleven feet high, having small fore legs, but very long and powerful hind legs. The feet, however, were like an eagle's, the claws being armed with formidable fangs about a foot in length; the head was of immense size, with crocodile-like jaws, well furnished with enormous teeth. The leopards was probably useful as well as ornamental. The animal standing on its hind legs, kangaroo-like, was eleven feet high, and being thoroughly carnivorous, was probably a troublesome and dangerous neighbor to the wild vegetation, the Hesperosaurus. Prof. Hawkins has a skeleton restoration of this animal in progress, and intends to make a complete restoration for the group which is to be the great attraction of the museum.

GRAND DIET OF WORMS!
Discovered by Watson's Scholedin!
(WORM CANDY)
WHICH is offered to the public as a perfectly safe, pleasant, and effective EXPELLER OF WORMS from the human system.
As this preparation contains no mineral ingredients, the administration of it to young children is not followed by the dangerous, and, in many cases, fatal consequences resulting from the use of many of the Vermifuges at present in vogue.
A compliance with the directions accompanying this, will prove that it does not possess the character of a purgative, but that it is the cheapest and safest remedy for Worms discovered.
