Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

For Diseases of the Throat and Lungs.

Whooping Cough.

Bronchitis, Asthma,

and Consumption.

The reputation it has attained, in consequence of the marvellous cures it has produced during the last half century, is a sufficient assurance to the public that it will continue to realize the highest prices that can be desired.

In almost every section of country there are persons, particularly old men, who have been restored from alarming and even desperate diseases of the lungs, by its use.

All who have tried it acknowledge its superiority, and where its virtues are known, no hesitates as to what medicine to employ to relieve the distress and suffering peculiar to pulmonary affections.

CHERRY PECTORAL always affords instant relief, and performs a rapid cure of the milder varieties of bronchitis, as well as the more formidable diseases of the lungs.

As a safeguard to children, and the distressing consequences which attend the Throat and Chest of children, it is indispensable, for, by its timely use, multitudes are rescued and restored to health.

This medicine gains friends at every trial, as the cures it is constantly producing are too remarkable to be forgotten. No family should be without it, and those who have once used it never will.

*Excellent Physicians throughout the country prescribe it, and Clergymen often recommend it from their knowledge of its effects.

The existing cause is toxæmia or blood poisoning, specific in its nature, generated either within or without the body, and spreading by either contagion or infection.

By contagion we mean the communication of disease from one person to another by contact, direct or indirect; whilst infection may be defined as the propagation of disease through the medium of the air, breath, clothes, etc.

The overcrowding of several persons in small apartments or houses, cold, damp, changeable seasons, filthy cess-pools, old ash and dirt heaps near a house, and defective sewerage, are, one and all, decided exciting influences.

Some twenty odd years ago, the possibility of the disease being communicated by infection was doubted, but the evidences of this mode of propagation have been so varied and convincing of late years, that it is at this day an admitted fact, by all enlightened members of the profession.

Dr. Edward Ballard of Islington, London, writing in support of this theory, says, "As a rule, it spreads in the houses, it invaded chiefly among the members of the several families who were mostly in communication."

He further added, "In no case where the separation from the sick person has been effected early in the disease have I noticed that it spread to separate individuals." From among a host of English writers on this disease, the names of Sir Wm. Jenner, Sir John Ross Corneal, and Doctors Hooper, Guy Harley and George Johnson may be enumerated as emphatic and first symptoms, as described in the history of the disease, being present, it would be advisable to use freely, several times a day, a gargle made by adding three teaspoonfuls of Chlorate of Potash and one tablespoonful of water to a full pint of water, used about milk-warm. Ten to fifteen drops of the Tincture of Iron may also be taken in a half wineglassful of cold soft water every three hours, by an adult; half this quantity to a child. If no decided benefit is derived within four-and-twenty hours, lose no time in sending for the doctor.

Sackville, February 2nd, 1878.

HINT FOR HOTELS.—Says the Galt

Reformer: "The Listowel hotel keepers have improved on their old style of doing business. Instead of looking to the profits of the bar topay them for little accommodations for weary travellers, they have generally made, they have resolved to charge a small fee for every such service, including watering horses and shed accommodations. The new order of things should be adopted everywhere, as it is no doubt that the doubt that the system has much to do with the drunkenness prevalent. Many a man would gladly pay for every little service done him at hotels who now feels uncomfortable because he may appear mean in not paying for such trifles. It is in the only way the landlord thinks of accepting. The action of the Listowel hotel keepers is worthy the consideration of hotel keepers in this country."

TREATMENT.

The question has often been asked me, how is diphtheria to be cured? What is the specific for it? My answer to these queries is that there is no cure, so called, no specific. The disease must be treated on the broad basis of general principles, by the skillful following out of which diphtheritic patients often recover, and without. And I would, in this connection, raise a warning voice against the habit many have of seizing on the so called "specific" and cutting it out for this ailment which from time to time appears in the public journals. The chemicals known as the hydro-sulphate of soda and sulpho-carbolic acid, for which extraordinary virtues have been claimed, and especially the latter, have been used extensively at home and have also been used in my own practice for some years, and the most that can be said of them is, that in skilled professional hands they have in many cases been productive of marked benefit. But when they are not suited to all cases. An observant practitioner, of even limited experience, will not look for curative results in this disease from any specified remedy or laud formula of treatment, but will strive to support the strength of the patient until the first fury of the disease has expended itself, by measures suitable to each individual case, whilst he makes a rational use of such medicines as may be indicated by the progress of the disease. It is upon alimentation or feeding of the patient and stimulants that we are solely to rely during this stage, and "the difficulties in the way of feeding are always great, and sometimes they are insuperable, but they must be resolutely faced. The alimentation of diphtheritic patients requires very great skill and tact, and, I might say, inventive power on the part of the medical attendant, assisted by the co-operation of a well disciplined conscientious, and obedient nurse. Each case has its difficulties of its own and must be met from hour to hour as they arise." The case is, however, very rare in which the medical attendant, if endowed with sufficient skill, experience, and patience, will fail to conquer this difficulty if he avail himself of the varied resources which are designed to meet such emergencies.

It is quite beyond the scope of an essay on this disease to describe for the general reader, to enter into details of treatment. But I may safely say, and hope instructively, add a few words of advice which may prove of general interest, before closing this paper.

Certain remedies have been lauded as prophylactics or "preventives" of this disease, but as a rule, all such articles fail to check the onslaught of disease. No dependence ## should therefore be placed in them. There are sanitary precautions, however, which should not be neglected. The sinks and drains in and about a house should be looked after, thoroughly cleaned and put in good working order; all dirt piles and ash heaps should be removed, and great care taken to have the cellar of the house kept dry; if it requires draining at times, and if there be a drain from it, be sure that it is clear and does its duty. Manure heaps and other stable litter and filth should not be permitted to accumulate in the vicinity of the house or wells of drinking water, as is too often done in country districts. Exposure to damp, raw weather, especially at night, when not warmly clad, should be avoided. The feet should be kept warm and dry, and all damp or wet clothing removed at once on getting home, and the exposure avoided. All contacts with diphtheritic patients, or those who are in any way brought into contact with them, without being every precaution to cleanse and purify themselves from all taint of infection, for it is the opinion of the highest medical authorities in Europe, as above referred to, that this disease is largely propagated by infection.

So soon as the disease makes its appearance in a household, the sick should be confined in one room, put to bed, and the rest of the family be forbidden any communication with the sick. The free use of ventilation and disinfectants should be employed throughout the house. The preliminary or first symptoms, as described under the head of symptoms, being present, it would be advisable to use freely, several times a day, a gargle made by adding three teaspoonfuls of Chlorate of Potash and one tablespoonful of water to a full pint of water, used about milk-warm. Ten to fifteen drops of the Tincture of Iron may also be taken in a half wineglassful of cold soft water every three hours, by an adult; half this quantity to a child. If no decided benefit is derived within four-and-twenty hours, lose no time in sending for the doctor.
