"And for that you would have me sell her!" the woman cried with a rude intensity of passion which struck me like a blow. "For shame! For shame, man! You per-suaded her to leave her home and her riends, and the country where she was known; and now you would have me sell her! Shame on you! Go!" she added scornfully. "Go this instant and get your scornfully. "Go this instant and get you men. The king, say you? The king! tell you I would not have her finger ache to save all your kings !"

She flounced away with that, and I retired crestfallen; wondering much at the fidelity which Providence, doubtless for the well-being of the gentle, possibly for the good of all, has implanted in the humble.

Finding Simon, to whom I had scarce patience to speak, waiting on the stairs below, I dispatched him to Maignan, to bid him come to me with his men. Meanwhile watched the house myself until their arrival, and then, going up, found that Franchette had been as good as her word. Mademoiselle, with a sullen mien, and a red spot in either cheek, consented to escend, and, preceded by a couple of links, which Maignan had thoughtfully provided, as escorted safely to my lodgings; where I stowed her in the rooms below my own, thich I had designed for her. At the door she turned and bowed to me, her face on fire.

"So far, sir, you have got your way," she id, breathing quickly. "Do not flatter said, breathing quickly. "Do not flatter yourself, however, you will get it farther even by bribing my woman!'

CHAPTER XXIII.

I stood for a moment on the stairs, wondering what I should do in an emergency to which the Marquis's message of the afternoon attached so pressing a character. Had it not been for that I might have waited until the morning, and felt tolerably certain of finding mademoiselle in a more reasonable mood then. But as it was I dared not wait. I dared not risk the delay, and I came quickly to the conclusion that the only course open to me was to go at once to M. de Rambouillet, and tell him frankly how the matter stood.

Maignan had posted one of his men at the open doorway leading into the street, and fixed his own quarters on the landing at the top, whence he could overlook an intruder without being seen himself. Satisfied with the arrangement, I left Rambouillet's man to reinforce him, and took with me Simon Fieix, of whose conduct in regard to mademoiselle I entertained the gravest doubts. The night, I found on reaching the street, was cold, the sky where it was visible between the eaves was bright with stars. A sharp wind was blowing, too, compelling us to wrap our cloaks round us and hurry on at a good pace which agreed well with the excitement of my thoughts. Assured that had mademoiselle been complaisant I might have seen my mission accomplished within the hour, it was impossible I should not feel impatient with one who, to gratify a whim, played with the secrets of a kingdom as if they were counters, and risked in passing ill-humor the results of weeks of preparation. And I was impatient, and with her. But my resentment fell so far short of the occasion that I wondered uneasily at my own easiness, and felt more annoyed with myself for failing to be properly annoyed with her, than inclined to lay the blame where it was due. It was in vain I told myself contemptuously that she was a woman, and that women were not accountable. I felt that the real secret and motive of my indulgence lay, not in this, but in the suspicion, which her reference to the favor given me on my departure from Rosny had converted almost into a certainty, that I was myself the cause of her sudden ill-humor.

might have followed this train of thought farther, and to very pertinent con-clusions. But on reaching M. de Rambeuillet's lodging I was diverted from it by the abnormally quiet aspect of the house, on the steps of which half a dozen servants might commonly be seen lourging. Now the doors were closed, no lights shone through the windows, and the hall sounded empty and desolate when I knocked. Not a lackev hurried to receive me then: but the slip-shod tread of the old porter, as he came with allantern to open, alone broke the silence. I waited eagerly wondering what all this could mean; and when the man at last opened, and, recognizing my face, begged my pardon if he had kept me waiting I asked him impatiently what was the

"And where is the Marquis?" I added, stepping inside to be out of the wind, and loosening my cloak. 6 Have you not heard, sir?" the man asked, holding up his lantern to my face.

He was an old, wizened, lean fellow. "It is a break-up, sir, I am afraid, this time."

"A break-up?" I rejoined, peevishly.
"Speak out, man! What is the matter? I You have not heard the news, sir? That the Duke of Mercoeur and Marshal Retz, with all their people left Blois this after-"No?" I answered, somewhat startled.

Whither are they gone?"
"To Paris, it is said, sir,—to join the "But do you mean that they have deserted the king?" lasked.

"For certain, sir!" he answered. Not the Duke of Mercoeur ?" I exclaimed.

"Why, man; he is the king's brother-in-law. He owes exerything to him.' Well, he is gone, sir' the old man answered positively. "The news was brought to M. le Marquis about four o'clock or a little after. He got his people together, and started after them to try and persuade them to return. Or so it is said."

As quickly as I could, I reviewed the situation in my mind. If this strange news were true, and men like Mercoeur, who had every reason to stand by the king, as well as Retz, who had long been suspected of disaffection, were abandoning the Court, the danger must be coming close indeed. The king must feel his throne already tottering, and be glad to grasp any means of supporting it. Under such circumstances it seemed to be my paramount duty to reach him; to gain his ear if possible, and at all risks; that I and not Bruhl, Navarre not Turenne, might profit by the first impulse of Bidding the porter shut the door and keep close, I hurried to the Castle, and was coming very sore. Swayne's Ointment presently more than confirmed in my stops the itching and bleeding, heals resolution. For to my surprise I found the ulceration and in most cases removes the Court in much the same state as M. de Rambouillet's house. There were double guards indeed at the gates, who let me pass after scrutinizing me narrowly; but the courtyard, which should have been at this hour ablaze with torches and crowded with lackeys and grooms, was a dark wilderness, in which half a dozen links trembled mournfully. Passing through the doors I found things within in the same state: the hall ill lit and desolate; the staircase manned only by a few whispering groups, Tobacco, 5, 10 & 20c Plugs. who scanned me as I passed; the ante-chambers almost empty, or occupied by the grey uniforms of the Switzer guards. Where I had looked to see courtiers assembling to meet their sovereign and assure him of their fidelity, I found only gloomy faces, watchful eyes, and mouths ominously closed. An air of constraint and foreboding rested on all. A single footstep sounded hollowly. The long corridors, which had so lately rung with laughter and the rattle of dice, seemed already devoted to the silence and desolation which awaited them when the Court should depart. Where any spoke I caught the name of Guise; and I could have fancied that his mighty shadow lay upon the place and cursed it.

Entering the chamber, I found matters little better there. His Majesty was not present, nor were any of the Court ladies: but half a dozen gentlemen, among whom I recognized Revol, one of the king's secretaries, stood near the alcove. They looked up on my entrance, as though expecting news, and then, seeing who it was, looked away again impatiently. The Duke of Nevers was walking moodily two and fro before one of the windows, his hands clasped behind his back: while Biron and Crillon, reconciled by the common peril, talked loudly on the hearth. I hesitated moment, uncertain how to proceed, for I was not yet so old at Court as to feel at home there. But, at last making up my mind, I walked boldly up to Crillon and requested his good offices to procure me an immediate audience of the king.

"An audience? Do you mean you want to see him alone?" he said, raising his eyebrows and looking whimsically at Biron. "That is my petition, M. de Crillon," answered firmly, though my heart sank. "I am here on M. de Rambouillet's business, and I need to see his Majesty forthwith,"

Rescued from a New York Home That Was Worse Than a Dungeon. NEW YORK, May 9 .- George Vanhove, a carpenter, living at No. 297 Fourth avenue, makes $19 a week. His oldest child, Lizzie,

12 years old, was committed to the Gerry Society last Friday in an emaciated condition, the result, according to Agent Deubert, of the society, of ill-treatment by Vanhove and his wife, the stepmother of the child. The girl was strong enough to tell Justice

McMahon yesterday what work she had done every day for years. She used to rise before any one else in the house, make the fire and prepare the breakfast before 7 o'clock. She dared not touch a mouthful till all the others had finished. Then she had to do all the washing, ironing and scrubbing, the doors being carefully locked so that no outsider could see the little thing

SHORT TALKS ON ADVERTISING.

[By Charles Austin Bates.] The truthful advertising is the one that brings business, and most all advertising is truthful, just as most all men are truthful. Occasionally one meets a man who lies. That sort of a man writes lying advertisements. They may pay temporarily, but no permanent success was ever built on a foundation of humbug.

Most of advertisers are honest. At least they mean to be, Often each one of half a dozen dealers will insist that he has "the biggest and best stock in the city." Of course they can't all be right, but that studies, go so far as to get at the monkey is merely a form of words. Really it doesn't mean much of anything, either to the writer or the reader, and so does no harm -except that it wastes valuable space in the paper. The advertisement that pays best is the plain, honest, forceful talk, written just as if the writer was talking to the reader face to face-a statement of facts. There is nothing in the world so interesting as facts, especially the facts of business.

They should be written about entertainingly. People like to know how and where things are made. Not a technical description, but a hint here and there. For instance: "These goods were designed and woven in France; the cotton came from Alabama and the silk from China. Twice across the Atlantic and once across Asia and Europe, and here is the finished fabric for 75 cents a yard."

It creates an interest that a mere bald statement never would get. Knowledge, thought and truthfulness will generally produce a good advertisement, and a good advertisement in a good paper will always bring good results. The removed ten corns from one pair of feet selection of the medium is the first and most important point. The writing comes after. Even a bad ad. in a good paper will bring some business. A good ad. in a poor paper is sheer waste. Rheumatism racks the system like a thumbscrew. It retreats before the power of Hood's Sarsaparilla, which purifies the blood. Love without limit is simply emotional Nothing impure or injurious contaminates the popular antidote to pain, throat and lung remedy and general corrective, Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil. It may be used without the slightest apprehension of any other than salutary consequences. Coughs, rheumatism, earache, bruises, cuts and sores succumb to its action.

When a man becomes so bad that women desert him it is time for him to be heading toward a graveyard.

A Wonderful Cure.—Mr. David Smith, Coe Hill, Ont., writes: "For the benefit of others I wish to say a few words about Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery. About a year ago I took a very severe cough, had a virulent sore on my lips, was bad with dyspepsia, constipation and general debility. I tried almost every conceivable remedy, outwardly and inwardly, to cure the sore but all to no purpose. I had often thought of trying Northrop & Lyman & VEGETABLE DIS-COVERY, so I got a bottle and when I had used about one half the sore showed evident signs of healing. By the time that bottle was done it had about disappeared and my general health was improving fast. I was always of a very bilious habit and had used quinine and lemon juice with very little affect. But since using three bottles of the VEGETABLE DISCOVERY the biliousness is entirely gone and my general health is excellent. I am 60 years old. Parties using it should continue it for some time after they think they are cured. It is by far the best health restorer I know." 3
