

STEN TO ME' DRAWS WELL-FILLED HOUSE

Popular Musical Comedy At Grand Theatre Gains Favor of Audience.

"Listen to Me," with its second lot to the city, drew an excellent house at the Grand Theatre last night. One or two of the principals have been replaced, the lines have been touched up, the dancing a trifle red, but in the main the show is the same as that which quite distastefully gained favor last season. Barbara Bronel, whose dancing was a sensation of the 1922 presentation, has given way to Peggy Earle, latter fitting nicely into the role of Mary Picklefest, as well as the Earl dances which the character is for.

Farguerite Williams might be considered better than the Betty Dawn of last year in the role of the Boreback. It is fortunate that McGee has been retained as nowball. The role of "Tillie the upper" is shown a little more into background of this year's performance. Last year it was a decided role, managing it well.

The settings and costumes, one of the strongest drawing-cards the show possesses, have apparently lost nothing in a year of travel.

"Listen to Me" has already played a number of large audiences at Grand. It remains here today and Sunday. It is sufficiently attractive to warrant three more good houses.

"The Girl of the Golden West."

"The Girl of the Golden West," the feature picture at Allen's, is a stirring though not gaudy drama of the days of '49, when the riffraff of the world had gathered in Southern California on the discovery of gold.

The Methusalem Quartet, billed as "Four True Israelites from the House of David," proved a novel feature at Allen's last night. Each of the singers was garbed in a natty summer costume, but what attracted most was their luxuriant beards and long-flowing hair. The unusual actors performed well and their renditions of "Carolina Mammy" and other southern love songs were good. They also used some clever by-play of the modern stage, and their banter belied their Biblical appearance. In fact they took so well with the audience that they were forced to reappear for two encores.

In conjunction with the act a short picture was shown, entitled, "Inside the House of David," and Shiloh, and other houses on the estate of recent "King Ben" were shown.

"Luck."

Unfortunately John Hines' new picture, "Luck," is stamped with mediocrity. Apparently having started out with no particular ambition, it can hardly be called a failure, but from a fairly decent start it descends into a series of rubber-stamp events, and becomes nothing more or less than an elongated comic. "Luck" could scarcely pretend to be of the same class as the last John Hines' picture shown here, "Sure Fire Flint."

But in spite of this drawback, and the one redeeming feature, that (whatever its other faults), "Luck" is not slow and long-drawn out, the bill at Allen's manages to be entertaining.

The vaudeville bears most of the burden, although the short screen features are each worth seeing. The vaudeville opens with two acrobats, who make a short act a very spectacular one. Their big feature is spinning in mid-air, while held by the teeth, a stunt which Lillian Lettzel made famous the last time a circus visited the town.

Lillian Lettzel made a favorable impression upon the afternoon audience. Her act is pretty and unusual. Its three sections are each of distinct variety.

"The Victor."

Silver-sheet offerings of well-to-do young men who win fame and the hearts of their beloved by forsaking their harum-scarum lives for the rope arena, are becoming rather common nowadays. Some of them are fair and others are flukes, but "The Victor," now showing at the Patricia, is a good portrayal of the aforesaid plot.

Herbert Rawlinson can usually be depended on to furnish a hour of interesting amusement and he makes the most out of his opportunities in "The Victor." Another star in the role might not be so pleasing, but Herbert is quite an acceptable person to deliver the K.O. when his "sweetie" is in the front row to see him win, shortly after throwing him down cold because he is a "common pugilist."

lunch was served. Mr. and Mrs. Wilson left later, amid showers of confetti, on a motor trip to Hamilton and Toronto. The happy couple will reside in Windsor.

The church was fragrant with summer flowers and palms, and the ceremony took place under a graceful arch of white blooms. As the wedding party entered the church, the wedding march was played by Miss Adeline Chambers. The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a lovely gown of white canton crepe, fashioned with a circular skirt.
