Potatoes—New Varieties and how they are Obtained.

That the possibility for improvement ment in the potato is greater than that of any farm crop, is evident, but that effort at improvement ment and the second prices—these are rare and scarce. I don't mean half-starved ones that I see so many of around our stores in coops. Now is the time to commence thinking about this branch of farm economy for next year's list and the food less that of any farm crop, is evident, but that effort at improvement must see. ment in the potato is greater than that of any farm crop, is evident, but that effort at improvement must eonstantly be in progress, to keep them up to their present high standard or advance them beyond, is absolutely necessary. The potate has been grad ually and steadily improved from a "tiny little root" as its parent, to the large, beautiful tubers grown at the present day; yet, whatever care, selection and cultivation has done for them, it has never been able to eradicate the inclination to revert to its natural condition, which inclination is manifest, to the greater or less extent, everywhere in the vegetable kingdom; and, as in the case of the potato, the greatest care and most careful cultivation will not suffice to keep them from deteriorating, although it will, to a certain extent though it will, to a certain extent arrest and delay the progress. But, thanks to an all wise Providence, who has provided, and the researches of man, who has discovered a way not only to keep the species to its present high standard but gradually advance man, who has discovered a way not only to keep the species to its present high standard but gradually advance it beyond. We refer to our knowledge of the way or power to create new varieties. The medium we employ is the seed ball. The tiny seed which the ball contains is sows, the plant which they produce, and which are the same as the growth from tubers, are planted and treated the same as though growing a crop of tubers, which in reality is the case. At the proper time the crop is harvested, which is a motley one, each stalk having produced a different variety, and as yet there is nothing by which you can determine their individual value. If the growth of all has been equally favorable, the varieties that show the greatest, vigor or best quality will eventually prove the most valuable. Thousands of seeding must be originated before one is obtained of as great or greater value than its parents, and a new variety, that surpasses all other, is hardly discovered once in a decade. The third year from the seed will fix their characteristics and determine their value. In the majority of cases the work has been for naught, but if the result has been and will be again the result and carriety, the crigionator may consider himself well repaid for a fortune has been and will be again the result has been and will be again that or favored and the benefit of the result has been and will be again the result and the benefit of the result has been and will be again the result and the benefit of the result has been and will be again the result has been and will be again the result and the proper time the core from a control the result and the proper the sead to the the seed is not eaten the time as eaten with the cencentrated to Colic in Horses.

it, making both the farm and the farmer rich at once.

We believe every farm should own a good farmer; we believe that the fertilizer of any soil is a spirit of industry, enterprise and intelligence.

We believe in good fences, good farm houses, good orchards, and good children enough to gather the fruit.

We believe in a clean kitchen, a clean dairy, and a clean cupboard, a clean dairy, and a clean conscience.

We believe to ask a man's advice is not stooping, but of much benefit.

We believe that to keep a place for everything and e-crything in its place saves many a step, and is pretty sure to lead to goo! tools and keeping them in order.

We believe that tit is a good thing the rich or well-to-do can afford to use. But it is a mistake when we consider their food value—their nour ishing qualities. Eggs, like milk, contain every element necessary for the development of a perfect animal, muscles, blood, feathers, everything in fact that makes the fully formed chicken, is contained in the yoke and white of an eggs. Indeed, there is no more concentrated or nourishing food than eggs. The elbamen, oil and saline are just in the right proportion for sustaining animal life. If, therefore, we eat to obtain strength, we will find that two or three eggs properly cooked will afford more nourishment.

An Agricultural Creed

We believe in small farms and thorough cultivation.

We believe the soil lives to eat, as well as the even of the even of the stomach believe the soil lives to eat, as well as the even of the stomach in the price of such, and the benefit to allow the gastric juice to circulate through it, and therefore it cannot be digested. And it is for this reason that whole corn, or that very coarsely ground, may be fed to a horse with less danger of colic or other diseases, induced by a feverish stomach, because, in the form of cracked kernels, it cannot adhere in a solid, plastic mass, and what is not digested will pass away in the droppings. But in the benefit of proper diet. No diet is thorough cultivation.

We believe the soil lives to eat, as well as the owner, and ought therefore to be manured.

We believe in going to the bottom we believe in going to the bottom outside, and the mass remains so long in the stomach as to create more or the sound to say digestibility. We believe in going to the bottom of things, and therefore deep plough in the stomach as to create more or in gand enough of it—all the better if it be a subsoil plough.
