

New Media & Human Rights Workshop

Participants

Shantayanan, Colin is a Communications Officer at the Canadian Race Relations Foundation. He has a Bachelor of Journalism degree from Carleton University and a law degree from Queen's University. He is a member of the Board of Directors of the Canadian Lawyers Association for International Human Rights.

colin@crf.ca

Bois, Paul is a Doctoral Candidate at the University of Toronto (OISE), Department of Adult Education and Community Development with a Program Focus in Global and Community Issues.

His dissertation title is Towards a more democratic news media: The impact that new media technologies are having (in progress) on progressive media organizations' ability to produce and disseminate vital human information.

Paul is in the process of founding The Real News Network (RNN). RNN will be an organization devoted to "Providing Real News for the Real World," through the use of the best old and new media.

pbois@realnewsnetwork.com

Burton, Patrick Founder and Program Coordinator of ICComm, a Canadian nonprofit volunteer-based internet organization that has donated internet access, services and support to over 300 nonprofit, charitable and community groups worldwide since 1995.

ICComm has helped Amnesty International's London Secretariat, the Canadian Human Rights Campaign, the Toronto Association for Democracy in China, and many other human rights groups. The ICComm internet server currently hosts The Canadian Centre for Victims of Torture, The Central American Refugee Center of New York State, and the website of Amnesty International, USA.

mahmagic@iccomm.ca

Clark, Jennifer (B.A. Wilfrid Laurier) is a sociologist, journalist, and researcher. Her research interests include human rights and the impact of the internet on social movements for women. She has traveled extensively through Europe and Canada. As a resident producer - editorial of the PanAm byDesign, she has been actively involved in its development. Ms. Clark plans to continue her studies at the University of Western Ontario to pursue her Masters of Journalism in May 1999.