punctured with not less than a dozen bullet holes.

"'Did you take it from a German soldier? I asked.

"No, sir,' was the reply, 'only from the wall of a dugout.'

"But how did she come to get so shot to pieces?" I asked; adding banteringly. I have never heard that the British soldier makes war on women.

"But his 'Un lydy was makin' war on us, sir,' he answered with a grin; 'or leastways one of 'er friends, three or four dagouts down the line tried to strafe us, and we had orders to strafe back.'

"Then he went on to explain that the Tommies had always vied with each other in collecting photographs from the walls of the captured dugouts as souvenits, a circumstance which the Germans, who appeared to have got wind of it in some way, endeavored to take advantage of bys running a wire from the back of some of these mural decorations to mines concealed beneath the floor. The Tommies had already learned to avoid stepping on the loose ends of boards, and to refrain from rocking 'tortoises' and picking up inconsequential odds and ends from the floor, but the 'mined' photograph was something new, and before the ruse was discovered several leleaning-up' parties were made to pay 'rather heavily' for the desire of certain show us the standpoint from which the desire of certain show us the standpoint from which the desire of certain show us the standpoint from which the desire of certain show us the standpoint from which the desire of certain show us the standpoint from which the desire of certain show us the standpoint from which the desire of certain show us the standpoint from which the desire of certain show us the standpoint from which the desire of certain show us the standpoint from which the desire of certain show us the standpoint from which the desire of certain show us the standpoint from which the desire of certain show us the standpoint from which the desire of certain show us the standpoint from which the desire of certain show us the standpoint from which the desire of certain show us the standpoint from wh bleaning-up' parties were made to pay massacre, seems possible.
