E. J. Chamberlin's Secretary Is Retiring at the Age of Thirty Years. ing at the Age of Thirty Years.
When E. J. Chamberlin took the vice-presidency of the Grand Trunk Pacific he found a boy in the office who had been secretary to his predecessor, Mr. Morse. He was a shy, retiring, almost bashful boy. But, following his usual custom, Mr. Chamberlin tried him out. The boy cleared the first low lumps very nicely. As they grew higher he continued to clear them.

He did his work well, although all the while even in his beardless youth he was looking for a place to light upon, if anything should happen.

When he had saved the first one hundred simoleons from his salary he bet it on a lot. He won, doubled, and won again.

He did his work so well that when Mr. Chamberlin went to Montreal as president of the Grand Trunk System he took "Old Nick" with him.

Observing persons, watching the president's secretary, marking his thoughtful pose, marvelled at the rapidity with which he was aging. And now at the age of thirty, after seventeen years of service, "Old Nick" is going away. Even at this mement he has packed his trinket and traps and has said good-bye to the "Big Chief." Only a few of the other "Indians know that he going back. But all who know him regret his going, yet both his coming and his going will leave a lesson behind. It has been fashionable in recent years to record the accomplishments of mature men who have arrived. Magazines have been established for the sole purpose of telling tales of success. But here is a man, a mere boy,—save for the gray hair—who has arrived even in his youth. Young men will do well, wherever young zeen are learning the railroad business, to follow his example. Kinsella has a fine conception of the value of words—he loards them.

Kinsella has had a town named after him on the Grand Trunk Pacific which shall stand as a ropounent to his memory, but he has builded for himself a greater monunent. Its foundation is friendship, its capitar respect. And now he goes back to the West. He has tasted the intoxicant of success. Deep down in subconsciousness he has been singing softly to himself:

"The west wind that whimpered the wild grass of old;

The west wind that whimpered the wild grass of old;
God's gift of the wild things that peopled the plain,
Is sighing and singing o'er oceans of gold; and

gold; and
J. too, am sighing to see them again:
westward the mountains, and eastward the woods,
And wonderful Winnipeg there with the goods."

Haida Indians. The Haida Indians are probably the most advanced in civilization of any band in the far Canadian West. Every most advanced in civilization of any band in the far Canadian West. Every stranger visiting the Queen Charlotte Islands is astonished at the marked difference between the Haidas and other tribes. They are met by men and women who dress well, who speak good English, and who can discuss many of the leading topics of the day. It was a common practice sixty years ago for the Haidas to raid the whole coast and to return with their deadwarriors and captured slaves. A few are addicted to the use of intoxicants, and the moral standard also of a small minority is not as high as the missionaries desire, but, in this connection, it must be remembered that the Indian marriage law is still governed by custom and is not subject to this restrictions latedward for the good of the whites. Following ancient custom the parent select wives and custom the parent select wives and husbands for their children. If either party becomes dissatisfied, in after years, when the influence of the parents is no longer felt, some Indians do not consider it immoral to leave husband or wife and associate with others. The best men of the Haida Nation however are endeavoring to Nation, however, are endeavoring to abolish these customs and are trying to lead their people on and on to a realization of the benefits of home life under Christian conditions. The ordinary Indian of many lands takes little head of the progress going on around him. It is not so with the Haidas. They read and study conditions and errought as conversant tions, and are quite as conversant with the affairs of the world as any munity of whites.

To Honor Tecumseh To Honor Tecumseh.

The Chatham Tecumseh Monument Association has decided to start out on an active campaign for subscriptions for a monument to be erected in that city to the memory of the Indian chief, who figured in the war of 1812. The citizens are being canvassed for donations and both Governments will be asked to assist in the movement. This project has been on foot for some time.

It is proposed to erect the monumen It is proposed to erect the monument on Tecumseh Park, in the centre of the city. Wallaceburg and Thames ville both have schemes on foot to erect monuments, but it is expected that when the Chatham organization gets under way, these two towns will join with Chatham and lend their in fluence towards erecting the monument nce towards erecting the monumer in the latter city.

Any weakness in your back? Sometimes you experience pain and eakness without much suffering. Later on the pain will surely come. The trouble on the pain will surely come. The trouble can be stopped now by rubbing on Nerviline—rub it in deeply over the spine, and then put on a Nerviline Prouse Plaster. In these remedies you will find wonderful and quick relief. They will spare you from an attack of Lumbago, which is the outcome of neglected pain in the back or side. For all muscular pains, strains, and weakness, Polson's Nerviline and Nerviline Plasters have no equal. Refuse substitutes.

The people, as you have hearly me say before are foole? have heard me say before, are fools." The last speaker was a young man whom Armitage had never seen before. He was a decided blond, with close trimmed straw colored beard and slightly curling hair. Opposite him, and facing the door, sat Chauvenet. On the table between them were decanters and liqueur glasses. "I am going to America at once," said Chauvenet, holding his filled glass toward a brass lamp of an old type that hung from the ceiling. "It is probably just as well." said the other. "There's work to do th

A servant now appeared bearing a fresh bottle of cordial. He was distinguished by a small head upon a tall and powerful body and bore little resemblance to a house servant. While he brushed the cigar ashes from the table the men continued their talk without heeding him. Chauvenet and his friend had spoken from the first in French, but in addressing some directions to the servant, the blond, who assumed the role of host, employed a Servian dialect.

"I think we were saying that the mortality list in certain directions will have to be stimulated a trifle before we can do our young friend Francis any good. You have business in Amer-ica, carino. That paper we filched from old Stroebel strengthens our hold on Francis, but there is still that question as to Karl and Frederick Augus tus. Our dear Francis is not satisfied. He wishes to be quite sure that his dear father and brother are dead. We must reassure him, dearest Jules."

"Don't be a fool, Durand. You never seem to understand that the United States of America is a trifle larger than a barnyard. And I don't believe those fellows are over there. They're probably lying in wait here somewhere ready to take advantage of any oppor tunity—that is, if they are alive. A man can hardly fail to be impressed with the fact that so few lives stand between him and"-

"The heights—the heights!" And the young man, whom Chauvenet called Durand, lifted his tiny glass airily. "Yes, the heights," replied Chauve net a little dreamily,

He glanced at his watch.
"I have work in Paris before sailing for New York. Shall we discuss the matter of those Peruvian claims? That is business. These other affairs are more in the nature of delightful diver sions, my dear comrade."

They drew nearer the table, and Durand produced a box of papers, over which he bent with serious attention Armitage had heard practically all of their dialogue and, what was of equa interest, had been able to study the the observed the care with which the man kept close to his coat, and he pondered the matter as he hung upon the balcony. His legs were numb, and he clung His legs were numb, and he clung close to the railing of the little ladder for support as he crept toward the area. At the second story his foot slipped on the wet iron, smooth from long use, and he stumbled down several steps before he recovered himself. He listened a moment, heard nothing but the tinkle of the rain in the spout, then continued his retreat. As he stepped out upon the brick courtyard he was seized from behind by a pair of strong arms that clasped him tight. In a moment he was thrown across the threshold of a door into an unlighted room, where his captor promptly sat upon him and proceeded to strike a light.

HE man clinched Armitage about the body with his legs while he struck a match on a box he produced from his pocket. The suddenness with which he had been flung tage about the body with his legs while he struck a which he had been flung into the kitchen had knocked the breath out of Armitage, and the huge thighs of his captor pinned his arms tight. The match spurted fire, and he looked into the face of the servant whom he had seen in the room above. His round head was covered with short wirelike hair that grew low upon his narrow forehead. Armitage noted, too, the man's buil-like neck, small sharp eyes and bristling mustache. The fit-ful flash of the match disclosed the rough furniture of a kitchen.
