An item of considerably more than usual literary interest is the announcement that for the first time for nearly seventy years, there is a change in the well-known cover design of Punch.

Few now living recollect Punch in any other cover than his familiar garb. He has, however, as a matter of fact, had a number of coats, not less than seven, to be precise. For the first three years of his existence it was the custom to change the cover design of the weekly issue with each half-yearly volume.

The first number of Punch was issued on the 17th of July, 1841, in a cover design by A. S. Heaning. The founders of the paper were greatly elated when the whole edition of 5,000 copies was sold out on publication, and their satisfaction was increased when a reprint order for an additional 5,000 was sold out on the following day. A sale of 10,000 copies of the first number of a threepenny humorous periodical was no mean achievement in those days.

The second cover was a graceful design containing many figures of Hablot Knight Browne ("Phiz"), a contributor to Punch for a long number of years.

A third design was a delightfully pretty one by william Harvey, the Shakespearean illustrator. Mr. M. H. Spielmann, in his interesting "History of Punch" tells of the consternation in the office when a charge of £12 12s. was sent in with the design—"nearly half the total capital with which the engraver Landells a year before had begun the concern."

Sir John Gilbert was commissioned to draw the next cover; a fine design which was subsequently used a great number of years as a wrapper for the Punch Monthly Parts.

Six months later Kenny Meadows produced the fifth cover, which was followed by a first design by Richard Doyle, a drawing in essential respects the forerunner of the now familiar design, which latter was produced by him for the beginning of the next volume, and was used for the first time in January, 1849. It is of interest to note that the first issue of the cover contained an advertisement of Part 3 of Thackeray's "Pendenia Does it pay to have your building and its contents amply covered by Fire Insurance? What would you do if you sustained a loss by Fire or Lightoicg, and did not have a dolar to build or replace? How much sympathy do you think you would get from your friends, and how much credit could you get on the strength of the fact that you had been negligent in a matter so vital? Figure it out for yourself, and when you have arrived at the only answer possible, let

It is of interest to note that the first issue of the cover contained an advertisement of Part 3 of Thackeray's "Pendennis." Thackeray was at that time one of Punch's principal contributors, and the firm of proprietors, under its then style of Bradbury and Evans, were publishers of his works, as well as those of Dickens, both of which were issued first in monthly parts, the one published on the 1st and the other on the 15th of each monthe lished on the 1st and the other on the 15th of each month.

It is safe to say that there is no better known cover design in the whole world than the famous drawing of Doyle's, which has now been in use for more than 64 years. The addition of the second color now proposed is said to greatly enhance Doyle's design, making the delightful figures stand out with greater clearness and vividness.

Savages and News.

The mystifying rapidity with which native races obtain news of distant events has for long been a matter of discussion. For example, the British defeat by the Zulus at Isandula was well known to the Kaffirs of Cape Town hours before the receipts of the combinal telegraphic dispatch, and there are very many instances of a like kind. Now we have another reminder of the same fact in the refusal of the British Secretary for the Colonies to inform Parliament as to the whereabouts of the Camel Corps, which is engaged in operations against the Mad Mullah in the wilds of Somalliand. Any information that might be divulged, said the Secretary, would be known by the Mullah almost instantly. But by what means does the black man transmit his information more quickly than the white man can send it by telegraph? It is no longer superstitious to suggest telepathy, but is it possible that savages know more of this than we do? Is it possible that any one knows more about anything than we do?

A new man has just been engaged. The last one left his job through boredom. "I am wasting my life here," he said. It is all due to J. T. Todd, general manager of the collieries. Mr. Todd is a born leader of men and this, combined with the fact that he can at will dismiss evildoers, practically the

"Not at Home."

Toward the latter part of Dante-Gobriel Rossetti's life he rarely left his house and garden, and preferred to see his friends and acquaintances by appointment. We betide the too intrusive stranger. It is said that one day an enterprising man called, duly armed with a letter of introduction and the servant was nearly yielding to the impulsive stranger when the painter of "Dante's Dream" leaned over the bannister and said in a firm, mellifluous voice, "Tell the gentleman that I am not at home."

Other Objections.

While James McNeill Whistler, the accentric painter, was trying on a hat in a London shop one day, a customer rushed in, and mistaking Mr. Whistler for a clerk, exclamed: "I say, this 'at doesn't fit." The artist eyed him for a minute, and then replied, scornfully: "Neither does your coat, and I'll be hanged if I like the color of your trousers."

It was no slight task for even a hundred to cut such a wealth of tobacco as Major Robert Beverly had planted, work as fast as they might, and pro-ceed over the fields in a fierce crawl ceed over the fields in a fierce crawl of destruction, like an army of locusts, and finally they begun to wax impatient. And finally up rese that termagant, Mistress Longman, straightening her back with a spring as if it were whalebone, showing us her face shamsless with rage and stained green with tobacco juice and here and there red with blood, for she had slashed ruthleasiv. She flung back her coarse tangle of hair, threw up her arms with a wild hurrabing motion and screamed out in such a volume of shriliness that she overcapped all the rest of the trent.

"To the stables, to the stables! Let "To the stables, to the stables! Let out Major Beverly's horses and let them trample down the tobacco."

Then such a cry echeed her that I trow it might have proceeded from a thousand throats instead of one hundred odd, said in spite of all that Captain Jayose could do, seconded by some few of us gentlemen who rallied about him, but were helpless since we could not fire upon our coadjutors, that mob swept into Beverly's stables, and presently out leaped, plunging with terror, all his fine thoroughbreds, the mob riding them about the fields in wild career. And one of the maddest of the ridors, sitting astride and flogging her steed with a locust branch, was Mistress Longman, while her husband vainly field after her, beseeching her to stop, and those around were roaring with laughter.

But she locked at me with a proud deficience and such a spirit of a man that I marveled at her. "Then to time to talk of love, sir," said she. "When a people strike for liberty they stop not for honey nor kisses." Then abe cried again, "Remember Nathaniel Bacon?" And again that wild shout echoed her silver voice. But then I spoke again, catching her bridge refn as I rode.

"Then go, if not because you love me, because I love thee," I said close to be ear with her golden hair blowing

And with this wild troop of animals, and the mob shricking in a frenzy of delight, and now and then a woman in terror before the onslaught of a galloping horse, and now and then a whole group of cutters overset by a charging and love is before all else, even that group of cutters overset by a charging hog, and up and after him, and slaying him, and his squeals of agony—verily I had preferred a battlefield of a different

And all this time Major Robert Bey erly's house stood still in the moonlight, and not a noise from the slave quarters, and the fields were all in a pumice of wasted plant life, and we were about to go farther, when I heard again the cry of the little child coming from a chamber window. I trow they had given her some quisting potion or she had broken silence before.

With all our efforts the mob could not be persuaded to return Major Bev-erly's horses to his stables, which cir-cumstance was afterward to the saving he would not have abetted the using of his fine stud in such wise, some of

CHAPTER XVII. ARY OAVENDIBH raised her voice high until it seemed to me like a silver trumpet and cried out, with a wave of her white arm to them all: "On to Laurel CARTERS white arm to them all: "On to Laurel Creek, I pray you, good people, on to Laurel Creek, and cut down my tobacco for the sake of Virginia and the bonor of the colony."

It needed but a puff of any wind of human will to send that fiery mob leaping in a new direction. Straightway they shouted with one accord: "To Laurel Creek, to Laurel Creek! Down with the places, down with the gov. Laurel Creek, to Laurel Creek! Down with the tobacco, down with the governor, down with the king! To Laurel Creek!" and forged ahead, turning to the left instead of the right as had been ordered, and Mary was swept along with them, and Catherine would have been crushed had not a borseman, whom I did not recognise, caught her up on the saddle with him with a wonderful swing of a long, lithe arm and then galloped after. And as for myself and Captain Jaynes and Sir Humphrey and others of the burgesses whom I had best not call by name, we went too, since we might as well have iried to hold the current of the James rives as that besellong company.

But as soon as might be I should HEAD out to Sir Humphrey above the din that our first duty must be to save hiery and Oatherins. And he answered back in a hoarse sheet, "Oh, for God's sake, ride fast, Harry, for should the militia come what would happen to them?"

them?"
But I needed no urging. I know not whom I rode down—I trust not any, but I know not. I got before them all in some wise, Sir Humphrey following close behind, and Raiph Drake also, swearing that he knew not what possessed the jades to meddle in such matters and shouting to the rabble to stop, but he might as well have shouted to the wind. And by that time there were more than a hundred of us, though whence they had come I know not.

though whence they had come I know not.

We gentiemen kept together in some wise and graduality gained on Mary, who had had the start, and there were some seven of us—one of the Barrys, fir Humphrey Hyde, Raiph Drake, Pseuco Downs, in such guise for a parson that no one would have known him, booted and spurred and riding herser than any by virtue of his best knows in the colony, myself and two of the burgesses. We seven gaining on the branches, in spite of the fact that seasy of them were mounted upon kajor Robert Beverly's best horses, theough their having less knowledge of knessmanship, closed around Mary Cavendish on Merry Roger, clearing the greund with long galloping bounds, and Catherine, with the strange horseman, was somewhat behind.

As we came up with Mary she looked at us over her shoulder with a brightness of triumph and withal something of merriment, like a child successful in mischief, and laughed and waved her hand in which, as I live, she held a sword which had long graced the hall at Deake Hill, and I believe she meditated cutting the tobacco herself.

Then a great cheer went up for her.

ated cutting the tobacco herself

Then a great cheer went up for her, in which we, in spite of our misgivings, jeined. Something so wonderful and innocent these was in the fresh entiausiasm of the maid. Then again her thumann or the maid. Then again her sweet roles rang out: "Dewn with the tobacco, gentlemen of Virginia, and down with all tyranny. Bemember Nathaniel Bacon, remember Nathaniel Bacon!"

Then we all caught up that last cry of bers, and the air rang with "Remember Nathanial Bacon!"

But as soon as might be I rode close enough to speak with Mary Cavendiah, and Sir Humphrey was on the other side, each with our jealousy lost sight of in our concern for her.

"Child, thou must turn and go home,"
I said, and I fear my voice lost its firmness, for I was half mad with admiraness, for I was hair mad with admira-tion and love and apprehension for her.

Then Sir Humphrey echoed me.

"The militia will be upon us present-lty," he shouted in her ear above the din. "Elde home as fast as you may."

She looked from one to the other of us and laughed gayly and shock her head and her soldes outus few to the head, and her golden curis flew to the wind, and she touched Merry Roger with her whip and he bounded ahead, and we had all we could do to keep pace, he being fresh. Then Parson Downs pelted to her side and besought Downs pelted to her side and besought her to turn, and so did Captain Jaynes, though he was half laughing with de-light at her spirit, and his bright eyes viewed her in such wise that I could scarce keep my fingers from his threat. But Many Cavendish would hear to none, and no way there was of turn-ing her, lest we dragged her from her seadth.

Again I rode close and spoke so that me one beatle her could fear. "Go home, I pray you, if you love me," I said. But she looked at me with a proud ear with her golden hair blowing "I obey not the man who leves me, but the man who weds me, and that not the heart of a weman if thou dost love one, sir," said she. Then she gave of his fine stud in such wise, some of the horses being recovered and some being lamed and cut.

So out of the Beverly plantation we swept, those on horseback at a gallop and those on foot tramping after, and above the tumult came that farthest reaching cry of the world—the cry of a little child frantic with terror.

Then they were for going to another large plantation belonging to one Richard Forster, who had gone in Ralph Drake's party, when all of a sudden the horses of nis who were leading swevet, and there was Mistress Mary Cavendish on her Merry Roger, and by her side, pulling vainly at her bridle, her sister Catherine.

Ache they would be almost priceless to those who ander from this distressing compiaint; but forta-nately their goodness does not each ere, and those who once try them will find these little pills vain-able in so many ways that they will not be wil-ling to do without them. Captain Jaynes essayed to form the cutters into ranks, but with no avail, though he galloped back and forth, shouting like a madman. Every man set to work for himself, and it was again bediam broke loose as at the other plantation. Then, indeed, for the first time I saw Mary Cavendish shrink a little, as if she were somewhat in timidated by the fire which she had lighted, and she resisted not when Sir Humphrey and her cousin Ralph and I urged her into the house. And as she entered there was Catherine, having been brought thither by that stranget who had disappeared. And we shut the door upon both women and then felt freer in our minds. Then she set him down in the tobacco and gave him a knife, and he went to cutting, having just enough wit to do that for which his mind had wit to do that for which his mind had been headed, and naught eise. The mot took a fancy to that new cry of Mary Cavendiah's, and every now and then the field rang with it. "Remember Nathaniel Bacon! Remember Nathaniel Bacon!" It had a curious effect, through starting in a distant quarter, where some of the fiercest of the workers were grouped, then coming nearer and nearer, till the whole field rang with that wide overspread of human voice, above the juicy slashing of the tobacco plants. slashing of the tobacco plants.

We had been at work some little time when a tall woman in black on a black horse came up at a steady amble, her horse being old. She dismounted near me and her horse went to nibbling the low hanging boughs of a locust near by, and the moon abone full on her face, and I saw she was the Widow Tabitha Story, with that curious patch on her forehead. Down to the tobacco she bent and went to work stiffly with unaccustomed hands to such work, and accusomes anias to such worse, and then again rang that cry of "Remember Nathaniel Bacon!" And when she heard that, up she reared herself, and raised such a shrill response of "Re-member Nathaniel Bacon!" in a high sobbing voice, as I never heard.

And after that for a minute the field seemed to fairly how with that cry of following, and memory for the dead hero, always Madam Tabitha Story's voice in the lead, shricking over it like

"Leed, have mercy on ua," said Parson Downs at my sibow. "She will have all England upon us, and wherefore could not the women have kept out of this stow?"

With that he went over to the widow and stove to quiet her, but she only shricked with more rury, with Mistresses Longman and Allgood to aid her, and then—came in a mad rush deer, and then—came in a mad rush her, and then—came in a mad rush upon us of herse and foot, the militia, under Capthin Robert Waller.
