"Fanchette does not know," she said to her heart again. "But she will know soon; all the world will know. It cannot be Middon."

Her own knowledge of the departure bore more and more heavily on her mind as the day passed.

Friends came, with pleasant words and sweet flatteries; she drove in the "ternoon, and met throngs who craned their necks to see her pass in her carriage; at High Tea she heard many compliments; and she dined with admiring friends, and spent a gay evening afterward, but always she kept the thought of the departure uppermost in her consciousness. And always she was saying to herself: "They do not know yet, for they would not dare laugh and jest in face of my despair if they knew; but by and by..."

It was a long day; and she was glad when at last she was again, in her bondoir.

Divested by deft hands of all her finery, her maid dismissed, she stood alone before the long triple mirrors turning on a bloze of pitiless light.

Yes, it was quite true; that which she had discovered in the early morning for the first time was painfully evident now.

PLEASING FUNCTION

Last evening in St. Patrick's Hall the girls of the Sisters' school presented a pleasing program which marked the closing of the celebration of the silver jubilee of their pastor, Rev. J.

J. O'Donovan.

The inclement weather did not interfere with the attendance as the capacity of the half was taxed to its utmost. The following excellent program was rendered.

While the maid arranged her beautiful hair, and selected the pretty frock from a bewildering array of delicate garments, she secretly watched the girl's face to see if any consciousness of the departure could be surprised thereon.

"Madame will choose the pink bows for her hair this morning? They suit her fine color so well."

It was at once a question and a decision, as the light hands held the velvet knots against the shell-tinted and most respected citizens. Deputy Chief Jenkins received word of his father's iliness last Friday and left immediately. The deputy returned to the city yesterday, bringing the sad news of his father's death.

Mr. Jenkins, who has been in failing health for the past year, took a weak turn last Tuesday and never left his bed.

Deceased was a prosperous and highly respected farmer, was born 84 years ago at Johnston, Queens County, of Loyalist stock.

EMPIRE THEATRE

This cosy theatre scored another success in its pictures last evening and good crowds came and went all evening. "King Henry the 3rd," a picture bringing you back to the historical time, showing all plots and jealousies toward the King and finally his assassination.

"The Travels of a Bass Drum," is one solid roar from start to finish. "On the Rocks," a dramatic picture of many very exciting situations, and the "Apostle of Gaul," sacred, made up the very excellent performance. Frank Austin secured another big hit and responded to his usual encores. Watch for Baby Rosa.
