

was when the first vote was taken but, even so, it appears that approximately 85% of the electorate exercised their franchise. In view of the rather special difficulties which had to be overcome in holding a midsummer referendum, this is a highly satisfactory vote — particularly since rain swept over the Island on polling day.

5. It appears that Confederation has secured some 13,000 more votes than it did on June 3rd whereas Responsible Government has increased its total vote by only approximately 2,000. In other words, the lead of about 5,000 votes which Responsible Government had over Confederation when Commission of Government was in the running has been wiped out and Confederation now has a somewhat larger plurality than the rival form of Government had on the earlier occasion.

6. The following table⁷⁸ shows the number of votes cast for each form of government by districts, as at the time of the latest count. Figures in brackets under the names of the districts indicate the numbers on the voters' lists. It will be noted that these figures are the same as those used at the time of the first vote. They are therefore subject to revision.
