cess of the conference to Pat Collins, the Biology Honours Coordinator.

"I was really pleased [with the outcome of the conference]" said Collins.

Attendance was up from last year. This year's conference fed about 110 people in a lunch provided by biology faculty members. Collins noted that many faculty attended as well as undergraduate students. She hopes that information about the conference will get out to other undergrad students interested in pursuing a major in biology.

The conference provides a great opportunity for students "to find out the level of work done in the honours program, meet some of the supervisors [within and outside the university] and get some ideas for their own research projects," said Collins.
