

WHY NOT GOLF DRAMA IN MOVING PICTURES?

THERE is something which smacks rather strongly of the cinematograph drama in the notion of a golfer wading into a sea of smoke and fire to play the shot that will save the hole for his side in a match, but this is exactly what happened in a fourball competition in England not so long ago.

While play was in progress, the grass at the seventh hole took fire, owing to the excessive heat, and, in spite of the efforts of groundsmen and gamekeepers, took some time to beat out. It was just at its best when the players arrived at this hole, and, as luck would have it, Harry Vardon, one of the competitors, sliced his drive right into the middle of the burning grass.

With his usual nonchalance, however, he found the ball and played it, and though there was more smoke than flame around him, it says something for his coolness in a novel situation that he laid his second nearer the pin than any of the other three.

God has supplied one or two dramatic incidents which even the most jaded of moving-picture audiences might find sufficiently romantic. For instance, there is good material in a story told by Dr. Pennell in his "Among the Wild Tribes of the Afghan Frontier."

The royal and ancient game had just reached the land of the wily Pathan, and the author relates how he was cycling round the polo ground, where some of the officers of the garrison were playing golf, when "suddenly a young Afghan, of some eighteen summers, who had been able to arm himself with no more formidable weapon than a sharp axe, rushed up to one of the officers and, before any one realized what was coming, dealt him a violent blow in the neck.

The officer partly shielded himself with his golf club, and thereby saved his life, for the axe came within a hairbreadth of severing the main arteries, and before the fanatic could deal another stroke he was felled to the ground by a blow from another officer with his golf club.

GOLF UNDER DIFFICULTIES

Surely, also, there is drama, and to spare, in the famous incident that preceded the winning of the gold medal at the autumn meeting of the Royal and Ancient Club of St. Andrews as long ago as 1860. The day was wild and tempestuous, and when news was brought that their was a wreck off the Eden, and that volunteers were wanted to man the lifeboats, the players with one accord abandoned the links for the beach.

"MAGIC DATE" IS NOVEMBER TENTH

MEN OF FIRST CLASS MUST ALL RESPOND TO CALL ON OR BEFORE THAT DATE

Ottawa, Nov. 6.—In Canada, no future date in the calendar is more important to thousands of people than November 10 next. That is the last day for reporting for service or sending in claims for exemption under the Military Service Act.

Severe penalties are provided for failure to report for service or send in a claim for exemption by November 10. Besides a term in jail, the offender loses his chance to appeal for exemption and is automatically drafted into the service after paying his penalty.
