Pickled People By WALT MASON

If there were no pickled people in this country of the free, what fine upstanding country this land of ours would be! Half the jails might be abolished and upon the poorhouse door there would be a sign announcing: "Nothing doing any more!" And the cops might safely slumber all night long upon their beats, and there'd be no homeless pilgrims finding lodgings in the streets, and but few would ever perish on the creaking gallows tree, if there were no pickled people in this country of the free. If there were no pickled people, homes now full of grief and woe would be glad with song and laughter, as Brantford Free Press to explain what they were long, long ago, ere Tired Father took it meant by a recent article in which to placing crimson tints upon his beak, ere he handed to the brewers all his earnings of the week. And a million weary women might forsake the tubs and suds, and a million ragged children might be wearing handsome duds, and a million useless loafers might be busy as the bee if there were no pickled people in this country of the free. Half the sorrow and the trouble in this weary world of ours come from tall and brimming flagons, sparkling wines and whiskey sours; what a brighter, better present, what a future we might see, if there were no pickled people in this country of the free!

Labor Men Discuss Many Questions

Delegate Brown reported that there is a possibility of a strike on the hospital building job, and Delegate Symons reported on his attendance at the last hospital meeting. Boys as Servants

A communication was received from Mr. R. Borthwick, 268 Darling street, stating he noticed that cil a short time ago in Montreal, a suggestion was made by the president as a solution of the servant girl question, that there were lots of boys in England who could be had cheaply to take the place of the servant girls. He asked the council to give the fire department had told the company matter their consideration. It was left over until the next meeting.

The election of officers was again That Cheese Ouestion

The cheese question was again ought up at the meeting last night. The council believed that the city ouncil allowed the merchants run that body. Delegate Symons last night said that the retail merchants first asked the city council to do market. The council did not grant this but put the vendors out of the market house. The council will keep after the city council until the cheese vendors are allowed to return to the a week, a stenographer who gets $6
