FACTS AND A LEGEND ABOUT MINING IN WARFARE

(By Victor MacClure.)

If, when you are lunching, you idly break a crescent-shaped "Vienno" roll, perhaps the significance of its shape never strikes you. There is however, a pretty legend about this roll in the shape of the Turkish emblem, and as far as one can remember it goes much as follows.

One morning, early, an honest pastry-cook whose bakery stood by the walls of the city of Vienna, rubbed the sleep from his eyes as he stooped over his mixing-board and prepared to make the morning rolls which were to break the fast of the citizens in the beleaguered city. Outside the walls lay the Turkish hosts —constant menace to Christian Europe—with whom, it is instructive to reflect, the Austrians are now allied. They had been besieging the city for some time and had spared no means to reduce the citadel ,by direct assault fire, and all the tricks of siege known in these times. As the baker kneaded his dough he became aware of a strange rattling noise that faintly disturbed the silence of the lake house. Carriers man, he sought for the source of the rattling, and his serious attention was attracted by the singular behaviour of some marbles left by his little son on top of a toy drum, with which the urchin had been playing on the previous day. The marbles were jumping on the drumskin in regular beats. What ghostly idea accounted for the phenomenon in the mind of the baker, history does not relate, but he crossed himself and shrank in horror from the mysterious happening. Fortunately, like many bakers of pastry, he was of stout build and phlegmatic nature and so, he did not run from his bake-house. As he listened, awestruck, he began to notice a faint, dull thud preceding every rattle of the marbles.

Then suddenly the cook remembered the Turks, and it flashed across his mind that it might be they who were making these thudding noises, by tunnelling under the wall in the hope of taking the Viennese troops by surprise. As quickly as a man of his bulk could, the cook fetched the Captain of the nearest guard-house to judge the noises for himself. The soldier had no doubt whatever regarding the cause of the thuds, and he took measures to ensure that the Turkish manoeuvre would be thwarted, or at least, if the tunnel were completed, that the invaders would receive a suitable welcome.

The good sense of the pastry-cook was reported to the Emperor who rewarded him and, so the story goes, granted the baker this boon, that he and his heirs should henceforth have the sole right to make, in commemoration of the city's salvation, crescent shaped rolls.

If you will allow your thoughts to run on, you will arrive, no doubt, at the present war, and the later tunnelling device—the land mine. Marbles or peas on top of a drum still make quite an efficient detector of hostile mining operations, but other methods have changed with the development of explosives. It used to be the scheme of the attacker to dig away the foundations from the walls of a besieged city. The sappers drove a trench up to the walls which they propped up—what time the besieged tried to divert their attention by pouring boiling oil or molten lead on top of them, not to mention dropping boulders and spiky iron balls. When the sappers had picked enough from the foundations, they pulled away the props and a breach in the wall resulted, through which the attacking party poured into the city—or not, as the case might be.

Nowadays walls and towers have vanished, but mine and counter-mine play a big part in trench warfare. The Sappers belonging to the tunnelling companies of the Royal Engineers, that admirable skilled corps of the British army, burrow, mole-like, under the German trenches and outposts, and insert a charge of explosive in the mine-chamber. This charge is fired at the appointed time, from secure distance, by an electric detonator, and the resultant explosion leaves a crater that looks, in many cases, like a good sized quarry hole. The waiting infantry advance through the smother and occupy the crater, often after a little brush with the enemy. A series of these craters are sometimes utilized to form a new line in advance of the old.

Put simply like that, mining may seem easy enough but, in reality the work is dangerous, hard and constant. Let us imagine, say, that there is a German post or nest of machine guns which is a thorn in the flesh of the British infantry, and it is decided to blow it up, as cheaper in blood—British, that is—than to assault it. First a pit is sunk to a good depth, and then a gallery is driven in the required direction. This has to be shored up with props and overhead timber. Not only so, but the water that is almost sure to flow into the pit from the surface, or from subterranean springs, must be brought under control by pumps or other means. The men work in relays, quickly, but without hurry. To be effective the springing of a mine must be a surprise, and the work is done as inobtrusively as possible since the German is quite willing to spring a counter-mine for the spoiling of the gallery and as many skilled miners as he can.

Therefore, on occasion, the Sappers have to pause in their work and make sure that the enemy is not digging under them. If it, were possible for you to go along a gallery at a certain time, it might chance that you came upon a group of earth-quiet and still. One might be putting his head into a bucket of water at intervals, another might have a microphone strapped to his head, but all would be sitting as if cast in bronze, a rapt evpression on their rough-hewn faces. You might nudge the officer in charge and whisper a query. He would mutter, "Listening time!"

The men who undertake this dangerous task of tunnelling, are miners from all over the Empire, from the coal-pits of Wales to the ore-mines of New Zealand. They do their work so well and face its dangers with such brave good humour, that they have established an unqualified supremacy over the miners of the Hun Army. Their officers are trained mining engineers, who, like the men, are drawn from every corner and fringe of the Empire. Hard-bitten pioneer so a man and devoid of the smallest atom of nervousness, they go about their work with grim intent, combining their hard-won knowledge with an uncanny sense of the requirements of the moment. You would be surprised to find, in a notoriously monoglot army, that many of these officers have more than a smattering of German. The truth is, that some of mine-engineering in the German oo fmine-engineering in the German school on the fringe of the Black Forest. So you can, if you like, chuckle quietly at the German being, in a small degree, "hoist with his own petard."

After a quarrel with his sweetheart, Arthur Stair, a soldier, jumped into the Detroit river and put up a stiff but vain attempt not to be rescued.

"Both hands on the steering wheel," is a rule whose enforcement in Chicago parks caused the arrest of fourteen sentimental motorists last Saturday night.

Visitors are not now allowed in American telephone exchanges, as a war precaution, so the opening of the new South Chicago exchange was a private affair.

Election of Clare

ELECTION OF IS A G

British Press to Re New Member Will Not Sit in ionist Papers M

By Courier Leased Wire

New York, July 12.—An Associated Press cable from London th morning, says;

The election of Edward De Vale as member of parliament for Ea Clare, the third Sinn Feiner to b returned to parliament of late, treated as an event of great politic consequence by the morning new papers, who devote considerabl space to the victory. The tendency o the Unionist press, reflecting the advices from Belfast and Dublin, to emphasize what it always co tended—the folly of the governmen in liberating Sinn Fein prisoner and refraining to deal with revolutionary talk and acts as such woul be dealt with in England.

These papers regard th situation as gravely threatening, for there is nothing in the Sinn Fein movement but rebellion The Liberal press also is alarmed but rather for the position of the official Nationalist party and for th prospect for the establishment o constitutional home rule. One opinion seems common among all parties namely, that the prospects of the convention in Ireland to consider home rule is seriously impaired, if not entirely doomed. Another view is that the election is an irreparable disaster for the Irish Nationalist party, which many Irish people complain, held the country for years in the dead hand of rigid machine policy.

The Sinn Fein movement is regarded in the same quarter as an expression of discontent and vehement resentment of a long course of administrative folly, indicating rather a lack of confidence with present parliamentary methods than a revolutionary tendency, and in this respect, resembling a state of mind which often leads Prussian electors, who themselves are not all Socialists, to support Socialist candidates at the poles.

ENTIRE STEEL PRODUCT

To Be Available For U. S. Government

Price to Be Determined On Cost of Production

By Courier Leased Wire.

Washington, July 12—Formal announcement was made by Secretary of War to-day that an agreement had been reached with representatives of the American steel industry in conference here, under which the entire product of the industry will be made available for the government's war purposes at a price to be determined on a basis of cost of production, in-
