"August Flower"
"I inherit some tendency to Dyspepsia from my mother. I suffered two years in this way; consulted a number of doctors. They did me no good. I then used your August Flower and it was just two days when I felt great relief. I soon got so that I could sleep and eat, and I felt that I was well. That was three years ago, and I am still first-class. I can never without a bottle, and if I feel constipated the least particle a dose or two of August Flower does the work. The beauty of the medicine is, that you can stop the use of it without any bad effects on the system. Constipation While I was sick I felt everything it seemed to me a man could feel. I was of all men most miserable. I can say, in conclusion, that I believe August Flower will cure anyone of indigestion, if taken Life of Misery with judgment. A. M. Weed, 235 Bellefontaine St. Indianapolis, Ind."

GENERAL NEWS
The New England Trotting Horse Breeders Association last week unanimously voted to admit members from six northern countries in New York state and from the provinces of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Quebec and Prince Edward Island. Changes in the bye-laws were voted, which make members eligible to the stakes closing May 1st, 1892.

An Earthquake at Sea.
A Galveston despatch says: The Norwegian bark "Elsie Anderson" came into port a day or two ago with a strange looking vessel in tow. This was the result of English build, dismantled and in need of repairs, which had been sunk more than fifty years ago, judging from its ancient appearance and awkward rigging, so sailors who have looked at it say. On the afternoon of Feb. 17th off the coast of the Three Islands, where the Elsie Anderson had been blown by a recent gale, there was a violent upheaval of the sea, about 2 miles distant from the spot where she was riding, that sent several waves sweeping over her which did much damage and threatened to submerge her entirely. When the alarm came by this sudden sea had subsided there was seen about a mile off a wreck which had not been there before the upheaval of the bottom of the sea, a phenomenon corresponding to an earthquake on land.

The wreck excited much interest among the passengers of the Norwegian vessel, and an order was issued to approach the strange craft, when it was seen that the remains of her rigging, stumps of masts and the hull itself were covered by thousands of sea shells causing the wreck to present the appearance of the miniature ships of shell-work to be purchased at any seaside town. The leaks which had sunk the vessel were now stopped by an accumulation of barnacles and the derelict rode the waves like a duck. A host of sailors were despatched to board the wreck and they found the hold and the under decks water tight save for a few feet of water, which covering the cargo, had sunk her. But this cargo and the other contents of the ship were entirely destroyed. In what had evidently been the captain's berth were found several iron bound chests, which had existed to some extent the ravages of time and sea, but on being opened the contents were found to be reduced to a sort of pulp with the exception of a leather bag. This bag became hardened until it was necessary to break it open with an axe, when from it poured a quantity of rusty discs, which being cleaned proved to be golden guineas of the year 1809 and amounting to the sum of $1005. There were also several watches of old-fashioned gold, some of these, however are valueless, having been blackened by the action of the water. This wreck was attached to the Elsie Anderson by a cable and towed to this port, where it is attracting crowds of visitors. On the fourth day after its detachment from the bottom of the sea by the "quake," it was found to contain three skeletons, two of them men and the other a woman, this last being a person of gigantic build and in life nearly seven feet in height. About the neck of one of the male skeletons was a chain of gold, to which was attached a silver crucifix and evidently a rosary.

St. Peter stood guard at the Golden Gate, With a solemn mien and air sad; When up to the top of the golden stair, A man and a woman ascending there Applied for admission; they came and stood.

Before St. Peter so great and good, In hope the City of Peace to win, And asked St. Peter to let them in.

The woman was tall and lank and thin, The man was short and thick and stout, His stomach was built so it rounded out, His face was pleasant, and all the while He wore a kindly and genial smile, The chorus in the distance the echoes woke, And the man kept still while the woman spoke.

"Oh thou who guardest the gate, said she, To let me enter the heavenly land, And play our harp with the angel band, Of me, St. Peter, there is no doubt, There's nothing from heaven to bar me.

I've been to meeting three times a week, And almost always I'd rise and speak. I've told the sinners about the day When they'd repent of their evil way, I've told my neighbors, I've told them all, 'Bout Adam and Eve and the primal fall, I've shown them all that they'd have to do.

If they'd pass in with the chosen few, I'd marked the path of their duty clear, Laid out the plan of their whole career, I've talked and talked to 'em loud and long, For my lungs are good, and my voice is strong.

So, good St. Peter, you'll clearly see The gate of heaven is open to me, But my old man, I regret to say, Hasn't walked in exactly the narrow way, He smokes and swears, and grave faults he's got, And I don't know whether he'll pass or not.

He never would pray with an earnest vim, Or go to revival, or join in a hymn; So I had to take him in sorrow there, While I, with the chosen, united in Haste what the pantry chanced to afford While in my prayer sang to the Lord, And the crucifix was in his hand, It's a chance if he merited them or not.

But oh, St. Peter, I love him so, To the pleasures of heaven please let him go, Or go to revival, or join in a hymn; So I had to take him in sorrow there, While I, with the chosen, united in Haste what the pantry chanced to afford While in my prayer sang to the Lord, And the crucifix was in his hand, It's a chance if he merited them or not.

And say, St. Peter, it seems to me, This man isn't kept in a cage to be, You ought to stand right at the opening there, And never sit down in that easy chair.

And say, St. Peter, my sight is dimmed, But I don't like the way your whiskers are trimmed; They're too long and wide and outward tossed; They'd look better narrower, cut straight across.

Well, we must be going, our crowns to win, So open, St. Peter, and we'll pass in, St. Peter sat quiet, stroked his staff, But spite of his office, he had to laugh, Then he said, with a merry gleam in his eye, Who's leading this gateway, you or I?

And then he rose in his stature tall, And pressed the button upon the wall, And said to the man who answered the bell, "Escort this lady around to--hades."

The man stood still as a piece of stone; Stood silent and kept his eyes ought to be, A life-long settled idea he had, That his wife was good, and he was bad. He thought to himself, "What a queer fellow! There wasn't a ghost of a show for him."

Slowly he turned, by habit bent, To follow wherever the woman went, But he said to himself, "What a queer fellow! There wasn't a ghost of a show for him."

Observed that the top of his head was bare, He called the gentleman back and said, "Friend, how long have you been wed Thirty years (with a weary sigh), And then he thoughtfully added, Why? St. Peter was silent, with his head bent down, He raised his hand, and scratched his crown, Then seeming a different thought to take, Slowly, half to himself, he spoke, Thirty years with that woman there, No wonder the man hasn't any hair; Swearing is wicked, smoke's not good, He smoked and swore, I should think he would.

Thirty years with that tongue so sharp, Ho! Angel Gabriel! Give him a harp! Give him a harp with a golden string, Good sir, pass in where the angels sing, Gabriel, give him a seat alone, One with a cushion, up near the throne, Call up some angels to play their best; Let him enjoy the music and rest.

See, that on finest Ambrosia he feeds, He had all the hallelujahs he needs, It isn't just hardy the thing to do, To roast him on earth and the future too, To give him a harp with golden strings, A glittering robe, and a pair of wings, Well, this beats cucumber, anyway, And so the Scriptures had come to pass, That the last shall be first, and the first shall be last.

A Brockville Druggist's Case.
Brockville, April 24th. The popular impression is that doctors and druggists seldom take their own medicine. This is no doubt true, but when a doctor takes it he generally calls in one of his own profession, in whose skill he has every confidence, or when a druggist is in a similar situation, he often puts his faith in the preparations of some other chemist, which he knows give good results. Both the doctors and druggists, in such cases show their good sense. A case in point happened in this town a short time ago. Mr. F. M. Turner, the well-known and popular druggist, who is now travelling for Parke, Davis & Co., has for a long time been a sufferer from congestion and inflammation of the kidneys. He tried a great many remedies but without results. His patrons, however, spoke so highly of Dodd's Kidney Pills that he was induced to try them. He now states that he is completely cured, and to your correspondent he said that as a rule he had very little faith in patent medicines, but that for the cure of kidney troubles, rheumatism, backache, etc., he does not know of any remedy that is giving such good results as Dodd's Kidney Pills.

WHOLE NO. 1,196
Chaos At Chicago.

I may as well tell you the status of affairs down at Jackson Park. The information I give you will not be borne out by Chicago newspaper accounts, but it is at least the merit of being true. The world's fair is in a state of chaos. None of the buildings is completed; none is likely to be completed by May 1, the date set for the opening. Not one-tenth of the exhibits have arrived, and even these are still loaded on cars and jammed up in inextricable confusion in the railroad yards at the world's fair grounds. The grounds themselves are a bottomless pit of sand, mud, and debris. The heads of departments are at their wit's end, adopting the violent suggestion that they have any wit at all. Nobody appears to be doing anything except draw a salary.

In the electricity building, for example, which has fifteen or twenty acres of ground space, just one exhibit has been installed. In the big manufacturing building three or four wooden booths or pavilions constitute the sum total of the inside work. The government building is a mass of scaffolding. Some of the state buildings are scarcely above their foundations. Everything is at sixes and sevens.

In a mess like this, of course, the programme for the opening day has been hopelessly lost sight of. It has not even been decided whether the exercises shall be held in the open air or in one of the buildings. No speakers have been invited, no invitations sent out. It is not even known certainly whether President Cleveland will be present or not, although it is assumed that he will be. - N. Y. Sun.

Where Anchors are Made.
"The little town of Camden, Maine, ought to have its name changed to Hope," said a dealer in ships supplies and stores, "for it turns out more of the emblems of hope than all the other places in this country combined. All of the stately ships that come out of the Maine shipyards look to that little village on the Penobscot for their anchors. Scores of sturdy steamships swing their hammers in some respect or other in the black, smoky, long low, Camden shops, where only anchors are forged. Sometimes the tripammers are going all night about the forges, and the blazing of the fires and the ring of the hammers are seen and heard for miles away. Thousands of tons of old iron are purchased by these queer establishments every year, for anchors are forged largely from cast iron. The material is cut into small pieces by great shears that clip through the iron as easily as a cheese knife slices butter. The pieces are bound into bundles by strong wires and are then fused into the forges. Then they are pounded and welded into the various parts of the anchor, some of them fashioning the rings, others shap'ing the flukes, others hammering out the palms and others forging the shanks. Then the 'complete' take the different parts and fuse and weld them into the finished anchor. Anchors of all sizes and weights are turned out from the noisy shops of Camden, the graceful little pleasure boat anchor weighing but a few pounds as well as the great 50,000 and 75,000-pound anchors of the biggest ships.

There are many interesting relics at Camden in the line of rusty and broken anchors that did duty on famous merchant vessels, historic warships and on sturdy whalers. What is left on the anchor of the U. S. frigate Cumberland is among these relics.

Cremer or Separator.
The following question with its very thoughtful answer, copied from Hoar's Dairyman, concerns many of the readers of the Post—which would you advise a farmer to buy, a creamer or a separator?

It all depends upon circumstances, and frequently these circumstances are of such nature that they cannot be described in words. Mr. W. H. Gilbert, of New York, speaking from experience as well as observation, has said repeatedly that it would pay a man who had ten good cows or buy a separator. Mr. C. P. Goodrich, of Wisconsin, equally good authority, and also speaking from experience and observation, is more conservative, and says that a man making butter from twenty cows can afford to buy a separator and power to run it. The reason given by these gentlemen for their opinions are based upon the fact that taking the average of milk throughout the season the separator will recover from one-quarter to three-quarters of a pound more butter from 100 pounds of milk than any system of gravity creaming.

But the separator, like the creamer, must be run intelligently and according to directions to secure best results. It can be operated by hand, but we do not consider it economical or practical to do so for any length of time. The expense of a separator outfit will, therefore, run up to something over $200, and every man must judge for himself whether it will pay him or not to incur this expense. Whether you get a creamer or a separator you need a Balchou tank—not alone to rest your cows, but to test your own milk in creaming and churning.

We do not think there is any appreciable difference in the keeping quality of the butter whether made from separator or gravity cream.
