17, 1853. res a flaming account ant " Liberal Reform essors as men who have sought to disfranchine the great body of the Electors? When was aver such a thing even attionated, or by whom? No man who has hitherto been estilled to yote has ever been even threatened with the deprivation of his franchine. On the constrary, there has appeared in all classes as anxiety to extend the rights of franchise as for as, keeping the peculiarizies of our situation in view, it isna predent so to do. It is, however, just as trace as that which follows it, viz: that the same party are " labouring to destroy the constitution of the country." All men are now convinced that fasponsible Government is the Constitution of the country, and all housest men will stand by and uphold it; and they will, we trast, go further; place it upon a finger and more securio basis then that which, an-der the present party in power, has eruntiled to nated. a fitmer and more scenre basis that that which, un-der the present party in power, has crambled to pieces. Departmental Government, we are now theroughly convinced—and our convictions has been the work-of the present administration, for we were formerly of a different opinion—is not the one best adapted to the wants of Prince Edward Island, and

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW, FOR OCTORER, 1853.

This periodical is comarkably rich in attractive matter, for various classes of readers. It treats of-1. The Institute of France; giving a summary of its history, from its first commencement to the pre-cent time, and is a part of the history of Earopean Literature, — for all great institutions, such as the sent to the pre-above, have a reciprocal action on each other, for not only their individual benefit, but for the general adancement of learning. 2. The Murder of Thomas a Becket. This important and interesting event in the history of our Fa-ther Land, is here described with a vividness and felicity which gives to it a scenic and dramatic character. We can see the bloody and infamous deed reacted in all its atrocity; and those who are unwilling to award to the ambitious and aspiring church-man the titles of saint aml martyr, claimed for him by his church, are. nevertheless, compelled to admit that the conduct of his king, and of those assassim who acted by his permission, expressed or implied, is without excuse, and that he met his end with the trage and determination of a man who felt strong a the honesty and propriety of his conduct. 8. Louis XVII. This is a page of history by itself, and one much wanted. It affords a melancholy proof, among others profusely furnished by the French Reamong others proteeny turnsned by the French Re-volation, that when irresponsible power is catrusted to the hands of a mob, there is no talling to what atrocities it may not be subservient. It affords, also, another exemplification of the trath of the aphorism, that Fact is sometimes stranger than fiction. 4. The Holy Places. - The public attention has been lately called to this subject, after a lapse of cen-turies; and this article will be read with much satisfaction by those who take an interest in these disqui aitions

2. The Diary of Causaubon .- This will hardly at-2. The Diary of Cassaubon.— I has will hardly at-tract the general reader, but will be read with seger-ness by those to whom the vicissitudes in the life of a scholar of such high renown carry with them, and which are too often,—though not in this instance —attended with molancholy and tegret, notwith-standing the halo thrown around them by the admi-vision table of construmentation and neutraling. ration both of contemporaries and posterity. 6. Electro-Biology, Mesmerism and Table Turn-

c. Electro-bringy, steamers and will find an attentive personal; but, to do it justice, would take a notice as long as the article itself. Suffice it io say, that, ad-mitting the phenomena attendant upon Electro-Bio-logy, &c., it accounts for them upon physiological and psychological principles. That the attention of the mind being fixed upon some dominant idea, the body becomes automatic, and is governed by the prin-ciple of suggestion. This, we are aware, is not easily understood; and we therefore refer our readers to the article-itself, where the principle is illustrated by examples drawn from dreaming, somnambulism, &c. 7. The Life of Haydon.—A melancholy but in-structive account of the Antobiography of an ambitious but disappointed artist.

MUTTLAL INFROVENEST ASSOCIATION.—On Friday evening last, 13th inst. Mr. William Heard dolivered a very instructive and entertaining locture on "Electro-Galvanism" or the "Uses of the Galvanic Battery." After intraducing his subject, with some remarks upon the origi-nal discovery of the science, and its rapid de-velopment, especially within the last ten years, the lecturer clearly explained the component parts of the instrument, and its mode of appli-cation in the Electric Telegraph. The Electric light, destined probably soon to supersede every other description of artificial light, the process of Electro-plating, the application of the Gal-vanic fluid for blasting and for medical purposes were each successively treated in his usual happy style, while his experiments at the close teneded fully to corroborate the facts he had been stating.

The Colonial Mail arrived to day at about 4 o'clock. We can find no news of importance in the papers. We understand that His Excellency Sir Alexander Bennerman received a private note, intimating that a person would be immediately appointed to the Go-vernment of this Island, and efforing Sir Alexander Vernises of this famo, and othering or Areasance the Government of the Bahamas. The report in the Canada papers, that Sir D. Daly was appointed to the Government of New Brunswick, seems to be an-founded; so that it is very likely he may be offered the Government of this Island, as we before inti-

> The APPOINTMENT OF A New LIEUTENANT Go-ventor....We are enabled to state on good authority, that up to the departure of the last mail from England, no person whatever had mail from Engined, no person whatever had been named as successor to the present Lieut. Governor of this Province. The announcement in the Canadian papers that such an appoint-ment had taken place, is allogether premature and without foundation.—New Brunswicker
