RAISING TOMATO PLANTS.—A gentleman who has tried the following plan of raising early tomatoes recommends it strongly: Take some turnips, hollow out the inside, and fill them with fine soil. Two or three seeds are sown in each turnips, so as to secure one good plant in each. The rest must be pulled out. He usually puts the turnips in a box and fills the interstices with soil to keep them steady and morst. He keeps the box in his kitchen. Of course the plants should have all the light you can give them, and should not be too near a stove. The great difficulty in growing plants in a room is that the atmosphere is toodry. The leaves should be repeatedly sprinkled with water, and the soil kept moist, but not too wet. When the plants have attained a good s.zc, and the weather becomes milder, they should be placed out of doors on warm days, and otherwise 'hardened off' before setting out in the ground with out disturbing the roots. The shell of the turnip soon deeanys and the tomato grows "right along."

DOMESTIC COMPORT.—The most prominent among temporal things to make life pleasant, is to be within the walls of a well-ordered house; not conspicuous for its finery of costiness, but by its fitness, its air of centness and content to all who enter to enjoy its comforts. The woman who does not make this a grand item in her routine of duties, has not yet learned the true dignity of her station; de so not enjoy the bleasings of life, and in directly despises her family and the Word of God. "She looketh well to the ways of her household," was spoken by the wiscet man that ever lived, and will be told as a memorial of silf whose noble women who have been eminent in "looking well" to the ways of their households. "Killed em all," answered Feejee. "What did you do with them after you had killed them?" but in Wilkes. "Eat 'em—good?" returned the savage. "Did you eat them all?" asked the half sick Commodore. "Yes, we eat all but one," replied Feejee. "And why did you spare that one?" inquired wilkes. "Because he taste too much like tobacco;
