POLLY PERKINS.

I'm a broken-hearted milkman, in grief I'm arrayed
Through the keeping the company of a young servant maid;
Who lived on board wages, the house to keep clean,
In a gentleman's family near Paddington Green.

CHORUS:

She was beautiful as a butterfly, proud as a queen!
Was my pretty little Polly Perkins of Paddington Green!

Her eyes were as black as the pips of a pear,
No rose in the garden with her cheeks could compare;
Her hair hung in ringlets, so beautiful and long,
I thought that she loved me, but I found I was wrong.

When I'd rattled in the morning, and cry milk below,
At the sound of my milk-pans her face she would show;
With a smile on her countenance, a laugh in her eye,
If I'd thought she'd have loved me, I'd lay down to die.

I asked her to marry me, she said, Oh, what stuff,
She told me to drop it, for she'd had quite enough,
Of my nonsense, at the same time I'd been very kind;
But to marry a milkman she didn't feel inclined.

The man that has me must have silver and gold,
A chain to his tie, to be handsome and bold;
He must stand to the minute on any watch spring,
And his boots must be shined by a brush for cloth-ing.

The words that she uttered went straight through my heart,
And straight did depart,
With a sigh as big as a bean,
Polly and Paddington Green!

A six months she married, this hard-hearted
Viscount,
But it was not a Viscount, and it was not an Earl;
It was not a Baronite, though a shade or two was,
'Twas the bow-legged conductor of a two penny buss.

FORTUNE TELLING.—One of our exchanges is responsible for the following story relative to this popular and pernicious vice: "Not many evenings since it is recorded that a sinner who has escaped hanging for, lo! these many years, was in company with several ladies. The subject of fortune telling was introduced. Several of the angels pleaded guilty to the soft impeachment of having written to Madame This and Madame That to furnish them leaves in their future history. Instances were mentioned of some very remarkable developements in a certain case hereabouts. 'Old R—was asked for his opinion. He replied: 'So far as I am personally concerned, I know more about myself than I wish to. I don't think any good comes of those things. I had a friend who dressed himself in lady's clothes, and called upon a celebrated prophetess. He did not believe she would discover the disguise, but he heard what made him exceedingly unhappy.' Here the old reprobate ceased. A lady much interested asked, 'What did she tell him?' She told him he was to marry soon, and become the mother of ten children!"

CALIFORNIA CLIMATE.—Here we are, says the San Francisco Bulletin, in the midst of what is conventionally called "winter" with rose s blooming in the open air, straw-berries ripening as in Summer, orange trees in blossom where there are any orange trees at all, bouquets of open-air violets selling at a bit on the streets, second-crop of apples that have just ripened exhibited in market, and grapes that have never suffered from contact with sawdust still plump, plentiful and cheap at all the fruit stands. Gardening to supply the city with early vegetables has actively commenced around the bay, and young radishes and green peas can even now be bought at lavish prices. Winter! The word should be abolished from our vocabulary as a superfluity.

—The Cairo Democrat says: "A most shocking sight was presented in the river in front of our city yesterday. The dead body of a man had become frozen fast in the floating ice, and when it passed here there had gathered an immense flock of sea-gulls around the corpse, and they were feeding off of it. The sight was enough to curdle the warm blood in the veins of the beholders. Some were perched upon the body gorging themselves as they tore the frozen flesh from the bones; others flapped around in the cold air, and still others were hopping about on the floating fields of ice, awaiting their turn at the repast. The awful spectacle floated by with the current of the river, and undisturbed passed from view."
