Prominent Ontario Man Recommends Gin Pills For The Kidneys

Found at last—a genuine cure for Kidney and Bladder Troubles. Mr. Pater knows about it. Mr. Simpson knows about it. And they are telling all their friends and neighbors what Gin Pills did for them. Here is Mr. Bauer's letter. Study it.

DAVETVILLE, ONT.
"I had trouble with my Kidneys and Bladder and I got a sample of GIN PILLS and followed directions. I felt better after the first dose and I kept taking them for a month.
One day, Mr. Simpson of this town told me about the trouble he had with his kidneys, and I recommended him to try GIN PILLS, and gave him one to take. The next day, he bought some for himself, and both he and his wife have derived great benefit from them."

A FRIEND IN NEED.

HERBERT H. BAUER.
Every man who has any Kidney Trouble or suffers with Rheumatism should do just as Mr. BAUER did—take GIN PILLS—and cure himself, as Mr. BAUER did.
You see, GIN PILLS do cure Kidney and Bladder Troubles. Gin Pills ease the pain in the back and stop those sharp, shooting pains. Gin Pills give strength to weak kidneys, soothe the irritated bladder and correct incontinence and suppression of urine. You don't have to take our word for all this, or even buy Gin Pills before trying them. Write for free sample—try them—see how good they are—and then buy the regular size boxes at your dealer's—50c, or six boxes for $2.50. Write for the free sample. A MYSTERIOUS QUEST.

CHAPTER XL.

SECRET ENEMIES.

(Concluded.)

"I cannot believe it!" was Jenny's exclamation, at this extraordinary revelation. "Who could do such a thing? Who would? I have not an enemy left in the world, unless—She thought of Mr. Byrd, but immediately dismissed the idea as ridiculous. "What do you think about it, Mr. Degraw?"
"I do not know what to think, Miss Rogers. I looked the papers in what I supposed to be a place of great security. As I could not know what would be the result of our interview, I did not have them put in the hotel safe as I should have done, thinking safe as I should have done, thinking of my trunk till I should return. But they have been handled, incredible as it seems, and the letter taken out; why the letter and none of the other papers, I must leave you to conjecture, since I have no means of judging of the matter myself."
"I am sure it is all a dreadful mystery to me," declared the poor girl, who was as ignorant of the world as most children of genius.
"Did you speak about it to anybody? Did you tell them you had lost anything?"

"Most certainly. I did not say what it was, but I announced that a very important paper was missing from my trunk. That is why I was detained so long. We were making inquiries."
"And—"
"They led to nothing. No one but my washer-woman had been admitted to my rooms, nor has any one else been seen to enter them. The thief must have been expert in his art, and known exactly what he was going for. But why should it have been your letter?"
"I don't know; I don't know. Perhaps because Heaven wished to punish me for my sins. I see no other reason."
"Miss Rogers, shall I put this matter in the hands of a detective?"
She shuddered, and placed her hand over her heart, as if the word had pierced her.
"No," was her quick reply. "If it was not stolen by a detective, I shall be surprised."
"What do you mean?" he asked.
"I am told that detectives are sly and secret. That they resort not only to honest but even to dishonest means for finding out what they wish to know. If Mr. Byrd has any real reason for distrusting me (and that he does distrust me is evident), he may have thought himself justified in stealing this letter. Though how he could have known anything about it, I cannot imagine, since you and I alone were acquainted even with its existence."
"Mr. Byrd is the detective who saved your life in Great Barrington?"

She bowed, flushed painfully at memories not yet sufficiently forgotten for her peace.

"A fine fellow, seemingly," remarked Mr. Degraw. "I do not think he would engage in such underhand business as this."
"He might think it his duty to the other Mr. Degraw, whose friend he is," she ventured, with painful hesitation.

Her visitor looked serious, but hastily shook his head.
"Unworthy of such a man!" he muttered. "An honest fellow such as Mr. Byrd appears to be, would not lend himself to any such scheme, involving the trifling of a respectable citizen's private effects. I would sooner suspect my washer-woman; and yet that is ridiculous!"
Jenny's head, which had fallen in dejection on her breast, rose suddenly, but immediately dropped again.

"Yes, that is ridiculous," she echoed.
"Had it been money," he remarked, "I should certainly have suspected this woman, for she is known to have been long enough in my room, while I was here, to have gone through my trunks; but a letter, and such a letter! What could it be to her?"

"Nothing, nothing," acquiesced Jenny, totally unnerved and disheartened by this last misadventure, "unless," she suddenly cried, "she was acting for the detectives."
Mr. Degraw looked startled.
"I hate to think it," said he. "She has washed for me several weeks, and has been more than once alone in my rooms. Yet in this way only can I account for the trunk being opened, searched and locked again in the short space of time in which I was absent. She was provided with keys."

A moment of silence followed, then he kindly observed:

"Had I solace to offer, I should not hesitate so long in speaking; but I coincide with you in thinking that this letter has been taken by an enemy of yours, and taken with the purpose of thwarting your marriage with Mr. Degraw. If, therefore, you would make this attempt innocuous, and merit the confidence of your lover and the admiration of your friends, you will go at once to Mr. Degraw and tell him what was in this letter, before it can have a chance to reach him."
For the first time she looked a her visitor with a gleam of suspicion; but it soon vanished before his unswerving gaze.

"I thought," she said, with a sort of yearning hesitation, "that you might have planned this story of loss to drive me to an act from which I shrink, but I see no such good news in your eyes."
"He did not think it worth while to answer this insinuation. On the contrary, he remarked:

"If you agree with me, that this is your one and only course, I will so far forget my former relations with you as to accompany you to Mr. Degraw's studio. If he sees that I am here to uphold and sustain you, he may think more lightly of your fault. At all events, you will not be alone, for if he rejects and despises you, I will take you into my brotherly keeping, and see that you never suffer for a home while I live."

"Oh, what goodness!" she exclaimed. "But I cannot accept it. I have not the courage!" And she indeed looked like a trembling child told to lay down her head to the ax's stroke. "I had rather beg, starve, die!" she murmured. "I have been hungry, in the old days,

"But how could she have known of my letter—of its being there?"
"Only in one way, Miss Rogers. I did not tell you all I learned about her stay in my room, because I could see no reason why this woman should be interested in this or any other letter of mine. But if she is in the detective's employ, the taking of 'his letter is the very thing she would be likely to be interested in; for it seems that she was in my bedroom while was opening and reading your communication in the adjoining apartment, and from my ejaculations she must have gathered an idea of its importance. Now, if she had keys, and was a police spy, she would naturally take means for procuring this letter, and as I was called out before she left, she had ample opportunity for unlocking my trunk and searching among my documents."

"I can be so again. It is not that I fear, but one of his averted looks."
Mr. Degraw's face filled with compassion. He could not help it in sight of so much misery and beauty. Yet he did not think of retracting his advice; indeed, he prepared to become more persuasive.
"But she gave him no encouragement to persist. Instead, she showed him a face so weary that he took the hint and turned toward the door.
"I perceive that you need rest," said he. "If you wish to see a letter, send a note to that effect to the Westminister. Meanwhile, consider what I have said, and command me for any duty I can conscientiously perform."
"I need no services!" she cried.
"If Mr. Degraw marries me, I shall soon have a protector. If he does not, I shall not need one; yet I thank you all the same," she added, with a touch of her old sweetness that so wrung his heart anew.

"And, Miss Rogers, let me urge you to listen to this: Remember that you have leased this house; that you paid for it in advance, and that it is your home to the end of the year. As for your other bills—"
"Don't!" she pleaded, holding out her hands in deprecation before her. "Any humiliation but this. If the rental of this house is mine, I make a gift of it to you from tomorrow morning on. I have spent enough of Mr. Delaney's money as it is, without charging his estate with my further maintenance. I can sing. Despair has robbed me of timidity, or rather despair will soon do so, if I am called upon to despair. But I may not be. Mr. Degraw has not yet seen that letter."

And making him low courtesy, in which the grace of the erring child mingled strangely with the dignity of a great-natured woman, she disappeared out of her own door and vanished up-stairs, while he stood troubled and more nearly at the point of adoring her than he had ever done before in his life.
