The Wounds of a Friend.

By RUTH CAMERON.

"If you aren't satisfied tell us, if you are tell others." The above is a very clever little advertisement which my friend recently put up in his shop. As a hint to customers it is excellent, but I think it has a far broader gauge than that—especially the first clause.

For if your merchant has a right to ask that you shall tell him, instead of others, when you are dissatisfied, your friends certainly have a far greater right.

"Well, I've spent seventy-five cents to-day that I'll probably never get anything out of," I heard a woman say the other day.

"How so?" someone asked. "I did an errand for Grace (naming a woman whose friend she is supposed to be) and I suppose she'll forget to pay me. She usually does. She's terribly careless about little things like that, you know."

"Why don't you remind her if she forgets?"

"Oh, I wouldn't do that," with an expression of injured superiority. "That would be so mean and little." As if it were half so mean as to give the woman a reputation for carelessness in money affairs!

As if it were ever half so mean and unkind to tell a friend of a fault or a mistake or an injustice as to tell someone else about it behind her back!

Another woman who prides herself on her generosity and justice shares a certain expense with a friend, each paying according to the accommodation she receives. Conditions have changed since the proportion was agreed upon and this woman feels that she is paying more than her share. Of course she should go straight to the other party and say so. Instead she tells other people and says nothing whatever to the friend herself who would be more than eager to set the matter right if she only realized how her friend felt about it.

Again a man who was boarding with a friend was much disturbed by her daughter's piano playing. "Had he spoken to his hostess I know she would have been glad to rearrange her daughter's hours for practice, but instead he found fault with conditions to others, and finally left the house without telling what his true reason was."

It takes more courage to find fault with a friend than behind his back, but it is the high kind of moral courage that is more to be desired even than physical bravery.

"Faithful are the wounds of a friend," but not when they are stabs in the back.

A conspiracy against the Peruvian Government was discovered on the night of July 22nd, and a large number of plotters were surprised and captured in the residence of Dr. Gerardo Balbuena Marranco in Lima. The prisoners included seven military men, all of whom confessed that it was their intention to overturn the Government.

A sudden raid made upon "blind pigs" and other illicit liquor places in Poreupine, New Ontario, on July 25th, resulted in the arrest of 51 culprits, charged with infractions of the liquor laws. Many of the offenders were heavily fined and two previously convicted were sent to jail for twelve and three months respectively.

The famous red trousers of the French soldier is now a thing of the past, their death warrant having been signed in the Chamber of Deputies last week. In future the army of the republic will go to war clothed in a neutral shade of grey-blue, which, it is claimed, will make the wearers invisible to the enemy at 500 yards, instead as at present being plainly discernible at 1,500 yards.

The quaint little village of Sulgrave in England was in holiday attire on July 25th when the first formal ceremony in honor of the one hundred years of peace between the English-speaking nations occurred there and Sulgrave Manor, the home of the family of George Washington, purchased for $42,500 subscribed in Great Britain, was handed over to members of the Centenary Committee as a gift to the American people.

The trial just finished by her acquittal in Paris of Madame Caillaux for the murder of Calmette, the editor of the newspaper "Figaro," has evoked intense political feeling, and many dramatic scenes were daily enacted in court as the case proceeded. Even the judges seemed to have lost control over themselves as M. Albanel, the presiding judge, has challenged to a duel Judge Dagoury, one of the three other judges, sitting on the bench with him, for a remark of an offensive character.

Excavations in ancient Antioch, conducted by Sir William Ramsay, have yielded the discovery of the Antiochian form, in Pisidia. Apart from the effects of rain and decay, it still is very much as it was when Saint Paul walked through it, and retains the form in which it was put about 14 to 18 A.D. An inscription of the reign of Augustus was engraved on the balustrade of the great staircase, sixty-six feet broad.

Severe earthquake shocks, causing considerable alarm, were felt at noon on July 27th on the southwestern shore of Nova Scotia, from Mahone Bay to Shelburne. The disturbances were in most cases felt in two distinct shocks. At Bridgewater the shock was very severe, and at Sable River, houses shook so violently that people rushed into the open, fearing collapse. At Liverpool there were two distinct shocks.

Three young girls were killed, three mortally injured and forty hurt, many of them seriously, as the result of the giving way of a large stony mass, called "The Rock of Calvary," at Val-de-France, on July 26th. The members of a Catholic gymnastic society had been massed on the rock during a pilgrimage, and the priest had just given them his benediction when the rock oscillated and tumbled down the footpath, knocking over many children grouped there.

Fourteen bishops of the Anglican Church, representing Churches in Great Britain and the colonies, met on July 27th at Lambeth Palace in London to reach a settlement of the heresy controversy known as the Kilguy case. The Archbishop of Canterbury presided. The bishops will consider among other things whether the proposed federation of the missionary societies of British East Africa contravenes any principles of the Church of England, and whether the action of the Bishops of Uganda and Mombasa in administering the communion to a number of persons who had not been confirmed was consistent with these principles.

The final decisions of the bishops will be announced by the Archbishop of Canterbury.

Germany, according to a London newspaper, has at last induced Holland to permit the construction of a German private harbor and steel works on the northern bank of the new waterway connecting Rotterdam with the North Sea. A German company controlled by the Thysses firm bought a large area some time ago on the bank of the waterway, but was unable to get Holland's consent to cut through the foreshore and make a harbor of it. This important step Germany has now achieved on behalf of the Thysses company. The London paper's correspondent believes there is now nothing to prevent the company from accumulating vast quantities of coal and war material and constructing great docks and a naval repairing station. The present importance of Germany's coup greatly transcends its political significance. It would be perfectly practicable for the company to build up under the guise of a commercial undertaking something like a German naval base, and it would be impassable in the event of a European war. Thoughtful observers regard the incident as a step towards the Germanization of Holland.

The belief prevails that the concession is the result of a deal, Germany having made attractive proposals to Holland in regard to the building of warships for the defence of the Dutch East Indies with Holland's consent to the harbor scheme as a quid pro quo.

The actor gets the big glad hand, the ladies think he's just too grand—they rock to matinees. The audience don't never think about the guys who slung the ink—the guys who wrote the plays. It's like the man behind the gun. The general has all the fun for what the gunners face. I mention these two things right here because they seem to come right near to Eddie Ainsmith's case.

You hear o' Walter Johnson's steam an' hear him called the unwhipped cream of all the pitchin' men. But Eddie don't copy out no fame—just catches, an' they put his name in box scores now an' then. Whenever Johnson's on the mound o' Eddie's face is always found caged in behind the man. He tips the smoke king what to throw. All Walter does is let her go. See, Eddie's play-write man.

It's some long distance from a joke to hold o' Walter Johnson's smoke. The other catchers can't. Ed's hands ar full o' kinks an' breaks, but they're the kind o' hands it takes to stop a Johnson slant. That speed hit Gabby Street away, an' he was some guy in his day down there behind the plate, Walt Johnson's game's a darn sure bet an' here's a hope folks won't forget his husky rummin' mate.

PIPES.

By GEORGE FITCH.

Author of "At Good Old Siwash."

A pipe is a small receptacle made to hold a portable conflagration. It is also used by its owner as a means of discouraging intrusion by strangers and fastidious friends.

A pipe consists of a wooden bowl filled with tobacco and a stem filled with nicotine and other noxious substances. It is connected with a man who is filled with smoke, which he exchanges with mutterings of deep content. Presently the contents will be replaced with deep and fervent cursing. This happens when the smoker inhales a gill of nicotine instead of the smoke. Until automobiles were invented, keeping a pipe in order and smoking sweetly was the greatest scientific problem which confronted the ordinary man.

Some pipes are made of meerschaum, a peculiar mineral substance which gradually absorbs the nicotine and turns from a creamy white to a beautiful glossy brown. Coloring a meerschaum pipe is a labor of love like running on the democratic ticket in Vermont and requires great talent and patience. Many a young man who has stood at the head of his classes in college has ignominiously burned the top off his meerschaum pipe; while many a man, who has been expelled as unworthy of the attention of the professors has achieved wonderful results in meerschaums with little apparent effort. This shows how futile it is to judge men by mere scholarship.

Pipes are more economical than cigars and five cents worth of tobacco burned in a pipe will make as much smoke as a river steamer. There are several hundred brands of smoking tobacco. Some are used merely to produce pleasure for the smoker while others are very useful for suffocating insects, fumigating houses and breaking up small gatherings of people who do not smoke themselves.

Many men become extremely fond of their pipes and smoke the same one year after year. These men can be detected, when the wind is in the right direction, at an amazing distance.

The Can Opener.

The handy tool, the household pet, we ply with skill and speed; and in the modern kitchenette it's really all we need. The shining tool that opens cans makes household work a joke; it super-sedes the pots and pans, the stoves that used to smoke. In olden times the toiling wives their weary lives preparing things to eat. They fried the meat, they baked the beans, they cooked the spuds, I wist; they had no time for magazines, for culture or bridge whist. How fortunate the modern wife, with many a leisure hour! For she can fill with glee her life, and languish in her bower. And when at evening comes her man, impatient for the cats, she says, "I'll open up a can of beans or deviled beans." It takes three minutes by the clock to get his meal in shape; he's so well trained he doesn't balk, or try to make escape. It may be, as hand over hand, he throws the victuals in, he sighs for grub that isn't canned, that doesn't taste of tin. It may be that his vagrant mind recalls the old-time steak, the dishes of the good old kind, his mother used to make. But idle are the man's regrets, and vain his hopes and plans; this is the age of kitchenettes, and things put up in cans.

More Fires.

Fires provoke immediate sympathy for the sufferer and also thankfulness for personal escape. Another thought should be whether one is personally and sufficiently protected? An insurance policy with Percie Johnson would provide for you this desired security and at small expense. Have you enough insurance?
