The next morning Tina came into the workroom, where monsieur and his forewoman were discussing some question regarding the work. She was pale and heavy-eyed, a fact which attracted monsieur's attention at once. "Mademoiselle has another of her vile headaches" he said, in a questioning, somewhat anxious tone.

Tina smiled faintly, but saying she thought it would pass away after a while, passed on to get her bobbins filled with thread. As she came back monsieur stopped her again.

"Mademoiselle must not work; she must go out into the air; she will be better then. She shall go and order some nun's thread, that I must have

So saying, he left Madame Fou-chard, and went into the hall with As she stood there, putting on her jacket and receiving some directions from him, madame came forth from the work-room, as if to put some 'uestion to monsieur.

"Mademoiselle's jacket is all awry," she said, and, going to Tina, she gave the garment a pull, as if to set it right. As she did so she flirted up the shirts of it, and instantly gave a cry of astonishment. The jacket was lined, but the lining Tas loose, and as madame threw the skirts, something very startling was revealed to Tina's two compan-Dieu!" shrieked madame, throwing up her hands and staggering back against the wall, while sieur's face became as white as his shirt-front. What is it?" Tina asked, turning toward them, only to find herself transfixed by the manufacturer's staring eyes and madame's frightened 'Will mademoiselle remove her jacket? monsieur asked in a constrained voice. 'Certainly," she replied, and quickly unbuttoning it, she slipped it off, wondering if there could be some hideous spider, or perhaps a mouse, among its folds to startle them so. Monsieur took it from her, and, lifting the skirts, revealed to her aston-ished gaze the missing laces, all nicely basted upon the lining, between it and the outside. Tina beheld the act, aghast.

Her face became like chalk; her heart nearly ceased its beating; her chest heaved as if oppressed by some fearful load, and all at once it flashed upon her that some enemy had Instinctively she glanced at mad-ame; but she only appeared to feel the greatest horror of the deed, minwith joy at the recovery of the stolen property.

"Mademoiselle, what does this mean?" Monsieur La Fort asked, in a shaking voice.

"Monsieur, I do not know," Tina replied, lifting her white face to him, but meeting his eyes gravely but

"But this looks very badly, mademoiselle," he said, turning again to Tina, and showing her the laces.

The young girl bent forward and looked at them, and noted how nicely they had been basted into her garment-so smoothly, indeed, that had not noticed or suspected anything of the kind, although she had worn her jacket nearly every day since their loss was discovered.

Yes, monsieur, it certainly does," she answered, slowly and sadly; "but I can only reaffirm that I know nothing about it. I did not take your laces, and did not dream that they were here. I have no use, no wish for such things, and I fear that some en-

Her eyes met his again in a pure, steadfast look, and he could not help believing her, while his last words set his thoughts running in another di-

"Will you go into the office, mademoiselle? I will talk with you further about this directly," he said, after a few moments of thoughful silence, and standing back to allow her to pass. She immediately complied, and monsieur was left alone with madame. "Listen!" he whispered, bending a stern look upon her, as the door closed upon Tina. "Not one word of this to a living soul, if you value your

"Monsieur shall be obeyed," madame returned, sullenly, a dark look of inger and mortification sweeping over her swarthy features as she went back to her work. Monsieur, more troubled than cared to admit, even to himself, returned to his office. He barely glanced at her, then went and stood by a window overlooking the court, her jacket with the stolen laces still in his hands. He remained there, and was silent so long that the suspected girl became terribly nervous. From time to time she glanced in a troubled way at him, as if she would read his thoughts, and, at last, he wheeled suddenly round on her. She neither appeared startled nor changed color; her eyes sought his questioningly, and there was not the slightest shrinking in her manner as she held out her hand toward him. "Shall I remove the laces for monsieu?" she asked; then, with a slight "But, perhaps, it start, she added: is necessary that they should remain where they are for the present—until monsieur has taken some action in the matter."

'Remove them," he said briefly, and bringing the jacket to her. She took it and began to pull out the threads with which the laces had been basted upon the lining, laying them out straight upon the desk before her as she did so. The laces, also, she carefully folded and laid in a pile, and, as the last one was removed, her eyes suddenly light-

She gathered the threads in her hand and looking up at monsieur, who had been watching her closely, said: "Will monsieur kindly examine these? Here is a green, a red, and a blue thread. I have no thread in these colors; it is as if someone had seized whatever had come first or con-venient, in their haste to sew the laces into the jacket."

Monsieur took the threads and examined them. They were coarse, and the color was well defined—red, blue and green.
Again she looked closely into that fair face before him.

Her look and her manner were so unconscious, she was so free from embarrassment, that he could not believe her guilty.

"Tina, you did not do it!" he half questioned, half-asserted, as he bent to look into her eyes. "No, monsieur," she answered, quietly, yet a little proudly, as if she half resented his familiarity with her and a deep sigh of relief bespoke the anxiety he had experienced on her account. "Give me the laces. I will put them away, and I will keep these threads for the present." He put the laces carefully in their respective places, then, after walking thoughtfully up and down the room once or twice, came up and stood before Mademoiselle Florienz again. "I am going out for a few moments; mademoiselle will please remain where she is until I return," he said.

He went at once to Madame Fouchard's room in the pension, and on her dressing-table he saw her workbasket. It contained a red, a green and a blue spool of thread. He compared the thread which Tina had taken from her jacket with that upon the spools. It was identical.

'Aha!" he exclaimed, "we have the spider, caught in her own web. In the pin-cushion, stuck there as if in haste, among a collection of pins, there were three needles, a bit of colored thread in each-one red, one blue, He took both basket and cushion into his possession, and returned to the salesroom. As he was passing a case of drawers here, and in which some of his choicest laces were kept, he noticed a shred of something shut into one of

THINK RUSIE IS ALL IN. The talk of Amos Rusie's return to the game of baseball is not received kindly by baseball men in general. Charlie Comiskey, the Chicago magnate, doesn't believe in the report, and "Scrappy Bill" Joyce—well, he laughs at it. Speaking of the rumor that Rusie had signed with incinnati for next season, Comiskey "I don't believe Rusie will ever pitch says:

"I don't believe Rusie will ever pitch a season through again. He is all in. No pitcher can live the life Rusie has lived and retain all his speed and oleverness. I noticed Rusie said he would be willing to pitch for an American League team. I don't believe any American League team would have him. He certainly wouldn't do in Chicago."
"Scrappy" Jovce says Rusie's belief that he can still pitch is a joke.
"In his prime Rusie was the king of them all." says "Scrappy." "but that was many summers ago. In '97, when I was many summers ago. In '97, when I was manging the Giants, I saw signs of decay. Before a game we would take turns rubbing Rusie's arm with red-hot salve. He would warm up until time to pitch and we would take the field, but the couldn't last more than five innings then."
