The party had not reached St. Augusline until quite late, but made light of the absence of their companions, feeling Bure that they would follow immediately. Mr. Halstead and Mr. Montrose sat up awaiting them until midnight, when the storm came on, and then they began to feel very much alarmed.

As soon as it cleared they both started also only out to find them, reaching the lake only a few moments before the return of the

a few moments before the return of the missing ones.

Ida retained her composure until her father's arms encircled her; then her sense of weariness and the excitement overcame her, and she yielded to the unnatural tension to which her ne res had been subjected, and fainted aw.

She was lifted into the crise in a state of unconsciousness, and he weary yet thankful party were driven with all possible speed back to the hotel, the man following with the two saddle-horses.

CHAPTER VI.

In spite of all Arthur's care, Miss Montrose took a severe cold, and a serious illness followed the exposure and excitement of their adventure on the island. For more than a week she lay in a raging fever and was quite delirious. Those who attended her never forgot that illness, nor the secrets which she revealed during her wanderings, for anyone who listened to her, for but an hour, would have learned how tenderly and devotedly she had grown to love Arthur devotedly she had grown to love Arthur

Halstead shared the anxious mother's vigils, and was often moved to tears by the wild passionate words in which the beautiful sufferer revealed her which the beautiful sufferer revealed her affection for her son.

When she told her husband, he replied though somewhat nervously:

"Well, well as soon as she gets better it will be all right; there will doubtless be an engagement, and we can announce it to our friends, though for that matter everybody is talking about it now as it it were a settled fact."

One morning, after the fever had turned and Ida was pronounced much better, Mr. Halstead sent word to his son to come to him in his private parlor.

"Well, Arthur, Miss Montrose is pronouced out of danger this morning," he said, as the young man entered, and catermined to find out his intentions without further delay.

"I am really glad to hear it, father; I trust she will soon be quite well again," the young man returned, in all sincerity, but not at all as an anxious, eager lover would have spoken.

"Of course we are all glad; but I sup-but not at all as an anxious, eager lover would have spoken.

"Of course, we are all glad; but I supposed you would be more rejoiced than anyone else," replied Mr. Halstead.

"How so?" Arthur queried, though a hot flush rose to his cheek as he said it.

"Why, everybody believes you are as good as engaged to Ida, and it is but natural to suppose that a lover would feel no small degree of anxiety over such a severe illness as she has passed through, and be proportionately elated when learning that all danger is passed."

"Father, I am not Miss Montrose's lover," Arthur asserted, abruptly and decidedly.

"What! Do you mean to tell me, after having followed her about for weeks like a pet dog, that you have no serious intentions regarding her?" cried Mr. Haltidad, with some warmth.

"The force of circumstances, and nothers also six her thrown me continually

"The force of circumstances, and nothing else, sir, has thrown me continually into Miss Montrose's society—has, in fact, compelled me to act as her escort on all occasions. I have felt from the first that it was placing me in a false position, and I should have been glad if it could have been otherwise; but I could not to refuse to accompany her upon our excursions without appearing rude and ungracious. You know how the others have paired off leaving me no choice in have paired off, leaving me no choice in the matter. I regard her very highly—shall always esteem her as a valued friend; but I have not given a thought to any nearer relation than that."

"Well I must say that I am astonish-Why, the girl loves you to distrac-

I am very sorry," said the young man, Ily, "for I do not, cannot return her

'Pooh, pooh! Arthur! most fellows would jump at the chance you have had to win a beautiful girl like Ida Montrose, not to mention her handsome fortune."
"Perhaps; and I only regret that someone who would have esteemed it such a privilege could not have had my oppor-tunity," returned the young man, stung to the sarcasm by the false, uncomfortable position in which he found himself.

"Nonsense, Arthur! Do be reasonable. I had set my heart on this match; so has Mr. Montrose; and it will be a bitter disappointment to us both if you are obstinate." Father, I am not obstinate. I love

"Father, I am not obstinate. I love another. I am as good as engaged to a Miss Waldemar, whom I recently met in New York," the young man confessed, in a repressed tone, though his color came and went, and his eyes glowed in a way which betrayed he was no tame lover in this instance.

"Zounds!" cried his father, aghast at "Zounds!" cried his father, aghast at this announcement. "You don't mean it! What Miss Waldemar?"

"Miss Audrey Waldemar, daughter of the Hon. Dudley Waldemar, They are now traveling, or were. I heard from them only yesterday. They have been detained in Chicago for several weeks by the illness of Mrs. Waldemar."

"I know them. So! sits the wind in that quarter?" muttered Mr. Hichard Halstead, looking very grave. "They're of good blood, fine family—very; but, I say, Art, it won't do!" he concluded, sternly.

"I do not understand you, sir."

"Well, then, to be plain, you are bound to marry Miss Montrose, in spite of all. I wish, for your sake, that I had known of your penchant for Miss Waldemar in the beginning, for I could have helped you to steer clear of this bad fix;

"Do you mean to tell me that I must marry Miss Montrose whether I will or not?" interrupted Arthur the indignant blood dyeing his whole face.
"Can't you see for yourself, Art, that you have compromised her in the eves of everybody? Why, it is common talk that you are going to marry her, and the people have been expecting the announcement of your engagement for some time—they certainly look for it as soon as Ida they certainly look for it as soon as Ida is able to be about again, after what happened last week."

happened last week."

"But I have never spoken one word of love to her: I have treated her only as any friend or a brother might have done."

"I don't know about that," retorted his father. "You have ridden and walked, danced and boated with her; you have been in her society almost constantive and I doubt if the public would consider you as disinterested as you affirm yourself to be."

"I could not help it I tell you."

yourself to be."
"I could not help it, I tell you. It has all been forced upon me, and I will not be compelled to marry any woman against my will," Arthur returned, with spirit.
"But don't you see-can't you understand how you have compromised her?"

demanded Mr. Halstead, impatiently.
"No. I do not see: I have conducted myself toward her only as a honorable man should conduct himself toward any lady." responded the young man, with dignity.

dignity.

'I do not doubt that, Arthur; you could not be a true Halstead and be otherwise. But—confound it all! it's a terrible muddle!—don't you see that, as Ida's afflanced husband, all that has passed will be looked upon as all right, otherwise there will follow a scandal which must prove a great injury to her?" said the father, greatly disturbed.

'And what of my relations to Miss Waldense? How is it about compromising demar? How is it about compromising my own name and honor in her estima-tion and that of her friends?" demanded Arthur, sternly

"Hang it, my boy! I am really sorry: it a man can stand such things better than a woman—"
"Audrey Waldemar is a woman." interrupted the young lover hotly: "a lovelier one you cannot find, go the world over. What do you suppose the Hon. Dudley Waldemar would say about my 'compromising' her in a way which would appear most dishenerable?"
"But, according to your own story, you did not know the girl more than three weeks, anyway: and here you have been dancing attendance upon Ida Montrose for almost as many months, and every-body, in this place, at least, thinks you are going to marry her, not to mention her own father and brothers."

"I tell you, sir, that idea—cannot be entertained by me for a moment. I am pledged to Miss Waldemar, and I shall be true to that pledge," said Arthur, firmly firmly.

Mr. Halstead flushed hotly.

He had always demanded implicit obedience from his children; his word had ever been law in his household during their youthful days, and since they had reached the years of maturity, the law of respect and mutual love had restained them from all disagreement and unpleasantness.

It was, therefore, a new departure, which both startled and angered the father, to have his son assert so firmly and independently a determination to go contrary to his wishes and plans.

"Then you will do so at the expense of your relations with me. No son of mine shall conduct himself as you have done during the past two or three months, and then turn his back upon the mischief which he has wrought with impunity," he began, in a low, determined voice.

voice. "Father!" began Arthur, and he was [To be Continued.]

AS TO CURING HICCOUGHS

Yawning Said To Be the Only Certain and Speedy Remedy.

"Yawning is about the best cure I know of for the hiccoughs," said an observant man, "and I have stumbled on the truth quite by accident. It was proved in my case a sure cure, and by reflection I am convinced that it is a perfectly logical result, a result ex-plainable, too, on physical grounds. "All kinds or remedies are resorted to by men who suffer periodically with hiccoughs, like stopping the ears, and drinking a glass of water slowly and without a stop, or by holding the breath, or counting, or thinking in-tently on some subject, and in many other ways. I have tried all of these remedies, and at times have been fairly successful in checking the hiccoughs Again, I have seen each one of these remedies fail. In my own experience, so far as these remedies are concerned, drinking a glass of water slowly and without breathing is the most satisfactory. But it is torturing enough. On the other hand the yawn is not only efficacious, but it is absolutely without any of the torturing features. There is, as I said before, probably a good physical reason for the yawn being a good remedy for the hiccoughs.

The hiccoughs is described as being a modified respiratory movement, spasmodic inspiration consisting of a contraction of the diaphragm, accompanied with closure of the glottis, so that further entrance of air is prevented. The impulse of the column of air entering and striking upon the closed glottis produces the sound peculiar to the ailment. It is reason able to assume that anything the would relieve the contracted state o the diaphragm, and would reopen th closed glottis, or partially open it, s the air could enter in a normal way would completely relieve the situation It would seem that the vawn, which nothing more than a deep, long breat would bring about this result. While the yawn is supposed to be an invol untary movement, due to drowsines it is yet a fact that a man can yaw at pleasure. This being true, it is easi within a man's power to cure the hic coughs by resorting to the very simp practice of yawning. Of course I can not say that in all cases of hiccough the yawn will prove a good remed; But I believe, in all ordinary case the yawn will do the work. rate, my own experience has convinced me of the fact, and beside

Most Dreadful of Skin Disease

A Chronic Case of Eczema of Years Standing Cured by Dr. Chase's Ointment.

The demand for Dr. Chase's Ointment during the summer months is enormous. It is during the warm weather especially that there is such great suffering from eczema and similar skin diseases. That Dr. Chase's Ointment is a thorough cure for this torturing disease is proven in hun-dreds of cases similar to the following: Mr. G. H. McConnell, engineer in Fleury's Foundry, Aurora, Ont., states: "I believe that Dr. Chase's Ointment is worth its weight in gold. For about years I was troubled with eczema and could not obtain any cure. I was so unfortunate as to have blood poison, and this developed in eczema. the most dreadful of skin diseases. "I was so bad that I would get up at night and scratch myself until flesh was raw and flaming. The torture I endured is almost beyond description. and now I cannot say anything too good for Dr. Chase's Ointment. It has cured me, and I recommend it because know there is nothing so good for itching skin.' Few people realize the suffering by eczema and other itching skin diseases. This is an example of what Dr. Chase's Ointment is doing in the way of relieving suffering mankind. AT HARLEM. Chicago, Sept. 4.-Lacrimae proved easily the best in the fourth race, at one mile, at Harlem yesterday, after a wretched start, in which Hargis and Jane Holly were badly worsted, Hargis, the favorite, backed from 6 to 5 to even money, was third at the finish, being beaten by John A. Clarke for place. Nellie Waddell won the second race with ease, covering the six furlongs in 1:13, according to the official timer, although a dozen private watches caught the time at 1:12%, which would have given the filly a track record. The official time given was due to an error of the man who held the timer's flag, who forgot to drop it at the right second, and necessitated what was practically a guess at the time made weather was cloudy, and the track good. The Nebraskan Has an Exciting Encounter With a Drunken Man.

Lincoln. Neb., Sept. 4.-Mr. Bryan had an exciting encounter with a drunken man at the Labor Day picnic here on Monday evening. The matter was not reported to the police until

Mr. Bryan and two friends were coming out of the park, when they saw two men fighting. The larger was unmercifully pummeling the other man. Mr. Bryan promptly interfered. In his drunken rage the big man drew a knife and revolver from his pocket. Mr. Bryan grasped him by one wrist, the other men grasped his other arm. The stranger was at least 6 feet tall and brawny, and had just enough liquor in him to increase his strength and fury. In the struggle that followed he proved a tough proposition. Mr. Bryan has not shaken hands for nothing the past six years. He had a clung to the man's wrist until he had him overpowered. The stranger was finally ejected from the park and the man who had been whipped also es-

"BLACKHOLE" OF TORONTO

Police Station in Terrible Condition-Prisoners' Lives in Danger.

Toronto, Sept. 3 .- There were seventeen prisoners at No. 1 police station last night, and as a result the drains became choked. This morning when the sergeant opened the door to cells he found the prisoners, men and women alike, standing in water and sewage up to their ankles. The stench arising from the filth was fearful. Judge McDougal said when the grand jury brought in a true bill in the case at the last session, in which the city was charged with the neglect of the necessary sanitary precautions in connection with this police station, that unless the evil was remedied by Sept. 11 somebody would go to jail.

New York, Sept. 4.-Mrs. Maria Conway, of No. 484 Pearl street, Manhattan, is the mother of nine children, and each one of them has been re-Conway because they were so beauti-

The seventh and eighth babies had remarkable eyes and teeth. They were as famous around the City Hall place region as the first comers. For weeks previous to the arrival of the ninth baby Mrs. Conway, who is a very religious woman, prayed that the baby should be a girl and should be as remarkable as the other children. Her prayer was answered. The bab that the stork brought at midnight was a girl, and was remarkable—she weighed 30 pounds.

The physician who attended Mrs. Conway pronounced the girl the healthiest child that he had ever seen. Some idea of the extraordinary size of the baby may be had by comparing its weight with that of the average baby.
At the J. Pierpont Margan Lying-In Hospital it was said that the weight of the average baby is 7½ pounds, or just one-fourth of Mrs. Conway's latest offspring. The measurements of the Conway baby are as follows:

Circumference of the head at the forehead, 16 inches; or head around cheeks, 17¼ inches; or arm, 7 inches; of thigh, 11½ inches; of chest, 22½ inches; length of the baby, 26 inches. The length of the average baby is 21½

Mrs. Conway was sitting up in her bed yesterday, poking the new baby with a feather and laughing as the child kicked her fat heels. The mother. who weighs 230 pounds herself, is doing finely. The father of the child, Mr. Thomas Conway, averred that he is not discouraged at the size of this girl, for he does not believe that her appetite will be in proportion.

Catarrhozone

Catarrhozone is sold under a guarintee that if it fails to cure, the money will be refunded. It has been used with unfailing success for years, and very rarely does it take more than a few hours to afford relief. Mr. W. H. Hicks, the well-known deputy collector of inland revenue at Sarnia, Ont., says: "Catarrhozone has permanently cured me of Hay Fever, and I can most heartily recommend it as the most speedily effective remedy on the market. I venture to say Catarrhozone will cure any case of Hay Fever ever known."
