At one stage during the second inning, after a rather rank decision in giving Dahlen out at third, McGraw from the bench, made some disparaging remarks about Umpire Mullane. The latter immediately ordered the Giants' manager off the grounds, and calling upon the police to enforce his commands. Bresnahan rushed into the center of the diamond to argue the matter, and Mathewson, who had taken his position in the box, got mixed up also. Mullane elbowed both players and their was a clinch by Bresnahan. Mathewson pinned Mullane's arms down to his side, and a merry time was on in an instant. Spectators flocked on to the diamond' from the bleachers, and every one of them evidently wanted to take a hand in any ructions that might be raised. A half a dozen policemen rushed up with drawn clubs, and felt around to their hip pockets in a decisive south-ern way that was convincingly suggestive. Manager Fisher, of the local club, advanced his kind offices and diplomatically settled the dispute by pleading with Umpire Mullane to allow McGraw to remain on the bench. Mc-Graw had nothing further to say to the umpire, but he kept up a running fire of repartee with the spectators all through the game. The Giants had a
