"I didn't have to teach him very much," said Miller. "So far as I know, the only experience he had in the outhled he got when he was at school, but he handled the job as though he never had worked around first base or anywhere else except center field, where I put him. Although he's a big fellow, he's remarkably fast, and when it comes to catching flies he's a ball hawk. Also he can throw."

"And as a hitter?"

Jack's eyes sparkled.

"There never was a better natural aitter in the game," he said, and one knew by the way he said it that he meant it.

"Remind you of any of the great iffers of the past or present?"

I'No one in particular. Well, Rogers Hornsby, maybe. He's a free swinger, like Hornsby. He holds his bat away flown at the end and blazes away. And his can sock the bail! He'll pur many a bail in the right field stand at the Polo strounds."

"Is he a right field hitter?"
"Not strictly, though he hits a lot to ght field. He can hit to all fields he's one of the toughest hitters to play or that I ever saw. But he's not only slugger. He's a beautiful bunter and he's so fast that he beats out most of taus.

"The thing about him I like best, however," continued Miller, warming to his subject, "is that he uses his head better than any young ball player I ver saw. He's a bright kid and doesn't have to be told more than once how to do anything, and when he's at the plate are a suways trying to outguess the opposing pitcher and fielders. And he coes, too. When the infield is pulled in for him he smacks hits over their fleads, and when they play back he dumps the ball in front of the plate."

"Has the fact that he is coming to the Giants at an enormous price affected his disposition?"

"Not in the least. He's very sure of himself on the field, which is one of the reasons why he's going to be a great player some day, but there is nothing arrogant about him, and off the field he's as modest as tny boy I know. He wears the same size hat leady that he wore before the Giants ever head of him."

"There's a chance that he may get away to a bad start as a Giant because of over-anxiety, figuring that he will be expected to deliver $75,000 worth of

According to the musical chirp of a few baseball sages, Walter Johnson of the Washington Senators will apparently ring down the curtain on his career as a major league pitcher at the end of 1923 season, but the fans, generally speaking, are not inclined towards this prediction. In fact, the average fan will corner you in a cigar store and whisper dramatically that Walter will be tossing bafflers when little Roderick has discarded rompers and is using a razor once a day.

True as all this may be, however, there is no doubt but what Time has fastened its relentless tentacles a little more firmly on Johnson. A few years ago the fielders on the Washington club were too dumbfounded to chase a ball if a man got a hit off Walter. They has discarded rompers and is using a razor once a day.

Tillsonburg, Jan. 19.—Playing a brand Hamilton. Jan 19.—Hamilton Tigers' rally in the dying stages of tonight's game against Kitchener fell just one short, and Kitchener went home with a 3 to 2 victory in their favor. The victory was not due to the fact that Kitchener had the better of the play, as they were outplayed for fully forty minutes of the sixty, but they had the finish that Hamilton lacked, and this alone accounts for the win.

Just before the game started Charlie Stewart was hit in the mouth by the puck and badly cut, and in the second period with the score, 1 to 0, against the Tigers, Stewart got in front of Schnarr's stick and received another masty cut on the lip, being forced to retire. Cricket also has its history in this respect, for it is recalled that the Fosters caused Worcestershire to be christened "Fostershire." In 1878 eleven Heaths played eleven Mitchells at Salford. The Mitchells, who won, had already defeated eleven Mitchells at Salford. The Mitchells, who won, had already defeated eleven Mieses and eleven Muggeridges, and were about to challenge eleven Lucases, who lived at Horsham.

During a local league football match at Milhouse, near Sheffield, one of the visiting players felt unwell, and went to the trainer's bag for a drink of brandy.
