THE BURGLAR.

BY DEN THOMPSON.

"There is no use of talking, Mr. Wylks, I cannot stand this much longer. You have been out every night this week until after twelve, and I haven't slept a wink, fretting and worrying about you, until I am almost tired out."

"Well, don't worry about me, dear. Go to sleep to-night, and get a good rest."

"That is just like a man, to talk so. Go to sleep, indeed! I presume you would, and leave the house to take care of itself, to be broken into by burglars, and maybe the whole family would be murdered. If you loved me as you used to when we first were married, you would not be willing to leave me every evening for the club-house, while I worry and fret, and get my nerves all unstrung."

"It is necessary that I should attend to these things, my dear. The country must be governed, and its growing needs require constant watchfulness and new laws. I don't mean to be out any more than I am obliged to. You must be willing to sacrifice a little for the good of your country. Just make up your mind that you will go to sleep, and you won't be troubled any further with wakefulness."

"The idea of me coolly making up my mind to go to sleep while you are out is perfectly preposterous. I wouldn't be so heartless."

"Well, I won't go out to-morrow night. I'll stay in with you; but to-night I must."

"Oh, dear! I suppose I must stand it; but I'm sure something will happen. I have a presentiment, and when did my presentiments ever fail? We may never see each other again. If you come home and find baby and me killed, don't be surprised."

"I'll try not to be," replied Mr. Wylks, as he put on his overcoat and smiled down at the troubled face of his wife. Then he gave her a good-by kiss and left her, and she hurried through the house to make sure that the windows were all fastened down and the bolts of the doors pushed into their fastenings, and then she sat down and read all the startling accidents, the terrible burglaries and the frightful murders that the daily papers furnished so plentifully, and when she had got herself wrought up so that she could sit still no longer, she once more visited all the windows and doors and warned the girls against removing a single bolt or bar. Then she returned to her cozy sitting-room and sat down in silence, listening for the sounding of some thieving wretch, and trying to imagine what she should do if one of the villians should confront her and demand her jewels and the key to the silver closet.

Time went on and the clock struck eleven, still she was undecided what she had better do if anything unusual should happen. The girls had gone up to bed, and were, undoubtedly, sound asleep.

Half an hour crept by. Baby cried out in his sleep, and Mrs. Wylks hastened to him, for there was no nurse to attend him. Mrs. Wylks never would trust the little darling with any one but herself. She shut and fastened the bed-room door, and lay down beside her little one to soothe him to sleep. The clock struck twelve, and then Mrs. Wylks heard a noise. Breathlessly she listened, soft footsteps were creeping up the stairs. They paused a moment at her door, and then she heard the knob turn, but as the door did not open the midnight marauder passed softly on. She heard him enter the sitting-room, and for a moment all was still.

"Something must be done," soliloquized Mrs. Wylks, as she softly raised herself from beside her sleeping infant. "I can't lie here and let everything be carried out of the house; I must do something."

Softly she turned the key, and gently opened the door, and noiselessly crept into the hall, determined to do something. Tremblingly she crept toward the sitting room door, expecting every moment to be met by the monster of a law breaker. She gained the sitting room door, and peeped cautiously in. No one was in sight, but she heard—yes, she very distinctly heard some one in the closet. An idea suggested itself to her mind. She clasped her hands together for a second, then springing quickly forward, she pushed the closet door to and turned the key. Only a few seconds work and she had him safe. She heard his cries to be let out as she fled up the stairs to the girls' room screaming.

"I've got him! I've got the burglar! Now, quick for the police! Ann, Bridget. He'll burst open the door! quick, get up and run!

Aroused from their slumbers, the girls rubbed their eyes and failed to understand the situation.

"Oh, be quick," cried Mrs. Wylks, wringing her hands.

"What is it, ma'am?" asked the girls in the same breath.

"The burglar! I've got him down stairs in the closet! Oh, hurry! He'll break out, and then we're lost!"

At the name of "burglar" both girls hid themselves under the bed-clothes, and paid not the least attention to Mrs. Wylks' pleadings.

"He'll break out, I know he will, and kill the baby. Oh, dear, ain't you going to get the police?" and Mrs. Wylks tugged at the bed-clothes.

"Och! och!" answered the girls, holding on to their night coverings.

"Oh, dear! I'll go myself! I won't be killed! I won't have the baby killed! I leave you to your fate!" and Mrs. Wylks fled, closely followed by the girls, who objected to being left to their fate, and, springing from their beds, they had caught up whatever articles of wearing apparel lay conveniently at hand, and followed their mistress down the stairs, past the door of the sitting-room, on to Mrs. Wylks' room, where a pause was made long enough for the anxious, loving mother to grasp her baby, and wrap a blanket, which she hastily drew from the bed, around it, and the girls arrayed themselves in whatever they had brought with them, enlivening the time, while making their toilet, with little shrieks and screams, as they heard a voice from the closet demanding, in no gentle tone, to be let out. Then the three women and the baby took up their onward rush down-stairs. They halted to open the front door, and the young heir of the household, so rudely aroused from his slumbers, entered a protest in loud and angry tones.

The door was opened, and Mrs. Wylks took her stand on the steps, while the girls hurried away for help. What a long time, it seemed to Mrs. Wylks, they were gone. She could not hear the captured burglar banging on the door, and calling to be released, not even when she stepped into the hall and listened. He had undoubtedly resigned himself to conquering circumstances.

"Oh, how I wish Mr. Wylks would come," she said to herself, nestling her baby close in her arms. "I knew something was going to happen. How glad he will be that baby and I are safe. Oh, I am so glad you have come!"

This last exclamation was caused by the appearance of the two girls and half a dozen police,

"You've captured a burglar, I understand, ma'am," said the captain, addressing Mrs. Wylks.

"Oh, yes. He's in the closet, up-stairs; that is if he has not got out," and Mrs. Wylks pointed the way for them to go, and followed closely in the rear.

"Sure, they think you're a hero, ma'am," whispered Ann to her mistress as they went up the stairs.

Into the sitting-room they marched, and arranged themselves before the closet door.

The captain unlocked and opened it; two officers sprang forward and dragged forth their victim.

Mrs. Wylks peered from behind the open door, where she had hidden, and looked at the prisoner.

She then came out to get a closer look, and with a rather ashamed expression on her face, she observed:

"Why, Mr. Wylks, is that you?"

After a short and entirely satisfactory explanation, the officers withdrew and Mrs. Wylks fondly embraced her captured burglar, who faithfully promised he would never, never, never, never do so any more.

* * * * Delicate diseases of either sex, however induced, speedily and permanently cured. Book of particulars 10 cents in stamps. Address World's Dispensary, Medical Association, 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N.Y.

A French chemist, J. Kergovatz, proposes to dispose of the bodies of the dead by rubbing them over with a solution of plumbagine, and then exposing them to a bath of zinc, copper, or even silver or gold. The body is thus preserved at a much less cost than that of embalming. If necessary, the bath can be prolonged till the corpse is as hard as granite, and thus every dead man of eminence might be his own statue.

—No person should go from home without a bottle of Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial in their possession, as change of water, cooking, climate, etc., frequently brings on summer complaint, and there is nothing like being ready with a sure remedy at hand, which oftentimes saves great suffering, and frequently valuable lives. This Cordial has gained for itself a wide spread reputation for affording prompt relief from all summer complaints.

The beggars of Paris support a bulletin, the Guide, by a monthly subscription of eight sous. It contains such announcements as: "To-morrow at noon, funeral of a rich man at the Madeleine;" "At 1, marriage of a clerk, no importance." "Wanted, a blind man who plays the flute;" or, "A cripple for a watering place."

A Cure For Drunkenness.

—Opium, morphine and kindred habits. Recipe and valuable treatise sent free. The medicine can be given in a cup of tea or coffee and without the knowledge of the person taking it if so desired. Send 3c. stamp for full particulars and testimonials. Address M. V. LITTON, agency 47 Wellington st. east, Toronto, Canada. ed

Of the 15,363 men that have taken degress at Harvard, 127 bore the name of Smith; 113, that of Williams; the Brownes and Brownes numbered 111; the Adamses, 100; the Clarks and Clarkes, 93; the Parkers, 79, and the Joneses only 58.

—Nearly all infants are more or less subject to diarrhœa and such complaints while teething, and as this period of their lives is the most critical, mothers should not be without a bottle of Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial. This medicine is a specific for such complaints and is highly spoken of by those who have used it. The proprietors claim it will cure any case of cholera or summer complaint.

An association of pharmacists in Paris has been discussing the old question of the influence of plants in bed rooms upon the health of the occupants. The conclusion is that the plants are beneficial, especially to consumptives, plants without flowers being preferable to those in bloom.

Honesty the Best Policy.

—An honest medicine is the noblest work of man, and we can assure our readers that Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry is not only reliable, but is almost infallible to cure cholera morbus, dysentery, canker of the stomach and bowels, and the various summer complaints, whose attacks are often sudden and fatal. 246

AYER'S Sarsaparilla.

Is a highly concentrated extract of Sarsaparilla and other blood-purifying roots, combined with Iodide of Potassium and Iron, and is the safest, most reliable, and most economical blood-purifier that can be used. It invariably expels all blood poisons from the system, enriches and renews the blood, and restores its vitalizing power. It is the best known remedy for Scrofula and all Scrofulous Complaints, Erysipelas, Eczema, Ringworm, Blotches, Sores, Boils, Tumors, and Eruptions of the Skin, as also for all disorders caused by a thin and impoverished, or corrupted, condition of the blood, such as Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Rheumatic Gout, General Debility, and Scrofulous Catarrh.

Inflammatory Rheumatism Cured.

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING

EPPS'S COCOA.

BREAKFAST.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast table with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

Made simply with boiling water or milk. Sold only in packets by Grocers, labelled thus: JAMES EPPS & CO., Homœopathic Chemists, London, England. 246

WHY IS IT THAT WM. BROWN

Can and does sell Furniture Cheaper than an one else in the trade

IN THE CITY?

That's easy to understand when one knows his circumstances. In the first place he buys his stuff in the best markets, from the best makers for

SPOT CASH.

In the second place he is under no expense comparatively speaking, no partners to share profits and no large salaries to pay, and turns over his goods quickly for small profits. Note his address. 246
