

in the Crimea attached to the third division, in writing to the Colonial Church and School Society, says:—"Some poor wounded fellows of the light division were brought to my hospital after the fall of Sebastopol, and I was occupied in visiting them on Sunday the 9th. I regret that there were a few to whom I could be of no use, but others were in a condition to listen to me. It gave me no small degree of satisfaction to observe with what pleasure they received my words when I spoke to them of Jesus, in his two-fold character of an atoning and sympathizing Saviour, as our great High Priest who is touched with the feelings of our infirmities. I met with a soldier of the 97th, whose remarks (though he was suffering great pain) were most gratifying. He spoke to me of the blessedness of that time when 'The nations would learn war no more.' He said he derived great comfort from that passage in Malachi, 'And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of Hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels.' Altogether there was an earnestness in his manner and so much of the Christian's experience in what he said as would lead you to conclude that he was looking then to Jesus as the author and finisher of our faith. He spoke to me also about poor Captain Vicars, remarking how anxious he was that the men of his regiment should be brought to the knowledge of the Saviour. It is my experience that men of this class have been brought under early religious training, and I have thought what a blessing it is that we have such institutions as 'ragged schools,' where the young are thought to know the Lord. Through whatever medium religious instruction is imparted to the youthful mind, it proves an inestimable blessing. You will be glad to hear that I had an opportunity, for the first time, of disposing of some of the books of the 'Prayer Book and Homily Society,' to the poor wounded Russians who were brought to the General Hospital here. I gave them to Mr Somerville, the chaplain to the hospital, and he told me 'that those Russians who could read their language made signs to him that they were much pleased with the books.' I have established a Sunday lecture in the hospitals for the convalescent here."

Those only, who have had, by faith, a sight of Christ, can with courage, see death, and without terror, look it in the face.

Those, who wish to see Christ, must go to his temple. There the Lord, whom ye seek, will come to meet you, and then you must be ready to meet him.

The Rev. Hugh McLeod of Sydney, C. B., begs to tender his warmest and best thanks to his beloved brethren and friends in Canada, for their kindness to himself personally, during his sojourn amongst them, as well as for the christian liberality with which they responded to the appeal addressed to them, in behalf of poor Highlanders in Cape Breton.
