True to the Faith

In the early days of the Indian mutiny, during the Allahabad massacre, seven cadets just out from England were murdered before they could join their regiments. The eighth, a lad of sixteen, was left for dead, but survived in spite of horrible wounds. For four days he succeeded in hiding himself in a ravine, living for most of that time without food and with little water. On the fifth day he was discovered, dragged to the native lines and thrust into a hut as a prisoner.

He found there another prisoner, a Christian catechist, who had formerly been a Mohammedan, and who was undergoing torture at the hands of the sepoys to make him renounce his faith. His strength and courage had left him, and he was giving way, when the English boy, forgetful of his own wounds and the further penalty of suffering that he might be provoking for himself, gallantly cried: "Don't deny Christ! Never deny Christ!"

Something of his spirit was infused into his companion. He refused to recant, and in spite of further tortures, he kept the faith for which he had already suffered so much.

Both catechist and cadet were rescued, but the cadet died of his wounds four days after.
