A WORD OF WARNING.

It may not be out of place for the REVIEW, in its spirit of solicitude for the welfare of the student-body, to address a word of warning and advice to those who, in a few weeks, will write on examination for degrees or diplomas. On the question of examinations, history is quite explicit,—the successful are those who, having worked assiduously from the beginning, persevere with untiring energy until the end. This, at least as a general rule, is true; and it would not be reasonable for one to confide to chance in a matter of such vital importance to him as the ultimate success of his studies.

The past is gone. We have no means to propose by which the indolent student may once more have at his disposal that which he refused to put to service when it was his; and he who has diligently applied himself is not seeking for such means.
