The duke, however, ridi-cules the idea that he is in any personal danger, and has quoted to Lord Spencer the latter's own words, when he told a meeting of Irishmen that if he were shot down, England would quickly find another man to take his place. The duke is about to visit Cork, and the Viceroy, mind. ful of his own unpleasant reception in the south of Ireland, urged that he should make his residence in the military barracks during Ms sojourn in that city. The duke replied that he had no doubt that the quarters at the

He boy and flag-sweeper in Fishamble street, shoe-black, waiter in a porter-house, felon in little, and then in low tone and measured words; but his placid, sheep like eye atten-Close, hosier in Smock alley, attorney-at-law, tively perused every individual, unobtrusive-editor of a newspaper, &c, &c. ; owner of a ly noted down every impression on memory's tablet, and betimes turned inwardly; while handsome chariot, with arms emblazoned in his ear opened to the conversation around, a capacious mantle on each panel, and crest not a syllable of which passed disregarded, made mental calculation of the profit likely to accrue from the harvest he was about to reap, when mature enough to thrust into it the sickle of the mower. Yes, Judas may have hadsome qualms beforehand for selling innocent blood ; but this man had none, and his callous bosom swelled high as, gloating in the prospect of the lucre an-ticipated, he beheld in vision the heads that were to fall, and measured each drop of the blood that should fill his cornucopia of gold. What a pandemonium ! cries the astounded reader, half-incredulous; what a conclave of unredeemed iniquity, without one contrasting spot to relieve the dark monotonous shade of the picture, without one vista of mind, heart, or soul, animated or inspired by one touch of divine grace, one gleam shining through the gloom ;---not one. But in Satan's divan is it not so ? And we know upon high authority that the demon, with seven more, bad as himself, have made their habitation in human bosoms; here they seemed to have established an empire, and no exorcist was invoked to dispossess them. The soup had been disposed of, and replaced by a haunch of venison, when Lord Carhampton, sipping a glass of wine, ad-dressed the host, and said : "So you had such a busy day at the courts, and as usual, more committals than acquittals, I fain say ?'

" Pifh, ifh ?" aspirated the squire, sniffling up his breath and blowing like Vulcan rest-ing on his anvil. "We weren't idle, I warrant ye ; the black-dog* is cramfull ; we've sent out some score fiats ; three fellows are sentenced to swing, and -but where's the use

" Thanks to Lord Moira, Sir John Moore, Grattan, Burgh, Abercrombie, and a crew of such officious intermeddlers with the policy culated to win or to attract admiration, but, of the Government," made response Lord contrariwise, that from which the eye of a Clonmel. "It is too bad. The sympathy with the disaffected Papists encourages them from some spectacle not good or pleasant to in their rebellion, and gives a sanction to such lax Protestants as set themselves up for liberal, to espouse their part ; such defelic-tion of principle, and the arrival of Lord Moira in the country to strengthen it, has been very unfortunate--quite nullifies all our coercive policy. I hear Grattan is going to softly into the face of Captain Armstrong, he continued, with bland suavity armstrong, he affairs progressing at Bond's ? Any rein-forcements coming to the United Irishmen ?"

The gentleman addressed paused a moment before he made answer, then coquettishly dallying, he smiled, simpered, looked mysterious, and in soft, purring tones rejoined: "We are getting on to our satisfaction -; recruits abundant, plans maturing. Pray, don't probe me deeper just now." He winked significantly, and Lord Clonmel, taking the hint, resumed, turning to Carhampton': "By-the-by, isn't it a scandal and a shame to see a Papist, such as Byrne of Cabinteely, in possession of that fine estate, and so many good Protestants lacking an acre of land. How comes it ?"

"Is Byrne a Papist, though !" said Claud-ius Bereaford. "His father, George Byrne, read his recantation and dropped the affix when he married the sister of the Marquis of Buckingham."

"Ay, did he," cried Carhampton, with a sieer; "and a fine convert he was: seldom if ever crossed the threshold of a church, scoffed the bishops, was never known to entertain a minister at his table; and though he lied in lip, in heart he was as papistical as the Pope of Rome could desire. Had I my will I'd hang all such humbugs.-But what of the present man, does he go to church ?"

"Was never seen inside of a church door,' briskly returned Clonmel. "Married a papist, old Devereux of Carrigmanan's daughter, and had his children baptised by a priest. How comes he to hold the property?'

"Why, I'll tell you; easy enough," cried Claudius Beresford. "The Buckingham family back him up, and they are powerful; their interest and patronage is his prop and shield. So, friend Higgins, you needn't be gaping with mouth wide open, as one that expected a plum to fall into it. Byrne of Cabinteely is as firmly rooted in his ground as you are seated on your cushion. Pass over the decanter, Sandys."

"Armstrong, why don't you get him to join the United Irishmen ; he would be an cquisition," exclaimed Clonmel, eagerly, and studying the countenance of the captain to learn from it, had an object so desirable been already compassed. But Armstrong, fiddling with his glass, made hesitating reply. "Lord Edward Fitzgerald and I called upon him; he received us kindly, and made us stay for dinner : but he refused point blank to listen to our overtures : said he had made up his mind never to interfere in politics; warned us against the danger of our own surreptitious proceedings; hinted that we would be betrayed by spies; in short, used such ad-monition and caution that, fearful of Lord Edward taking alarm, I hurried him away." "What about those kinsmen of his lately come from France, whom I have met at Gen-eral Cockburn's ?" demanded Beresford. What are their politics -revolutionary, no. doubt ? " "No," returned Armstrong, dejectedly.

"We sounded them, too, and they won't join us. Michael is the only one of the clan we found pliant."

"Fudge !" roared Major Swan, whose potations were beginning to render him animat-ed, "I'll stake my soul-ycs, sir, my soulevery man of the name theyall, not stem the course of law in theyall, not stem the course of law in tavor, of a Papist in whom they have no special; interest, unless he makes it himself worth their while, and in that you can circumvent him!"

"But my Lord Clonmel won't countenance it ;; he's a patriot and favours the Papists," cried Major Sirr, ogling his lordship with satirical humour.

"Hold your jaw? I was a d-d ass !" vociferated "Clonmel, half-frowning, half-mirthfully." "Having a talent for acting, I got up one morning moonstruck with the notion that Twould play the double role of tribune and statesman to achieve popularity, without one iota of sympathy in the matter. I voted for the Roman Catholic Bill, and by 2 so doing fell to zero in Government favour, without gaining public applause, as I wouldn't go the whole hog'with the people, like Grattan. I can't think how Burgh contrives it : he's the best actor I know of, for he keeps with the people and Government both ; and as to my patriotism; why, all I have to say is, I'd be sorry to sanction, by my example or approval, the unmatural villification of fatherland in which Lord Clare vents his spleen, or the atrocious coercion of which he is the advocate for crushing the people ; but as for courting popularity again by patronizing this measure or that, one man or another I declarc off----" "Isn't that a hard case about young O'Driscoll ?" here chimed in Major Swan, diverting the theme to another current. "As fine a young fellow as ever you saw, Protes-tant and all, choused out of his father's es-tate and illegitimatised by some flaw in his birth that debars him from inheriting ----" "Glad of it ;- conceited puppy !" ejaculated O.audius Beresford.

"One of the godly saints that all your blandishments could not entice to become one of our club in that Arcadian locality and elysian bower of Crane-lane,"tlaughed Kings-borough, winking over a glass of punch at the squire, who naively returned, pursing his flabby nether lip :

"I hate these pious ones; they come to no good for all their sneaking whine and caut." himself. Moira's chaplain, Berwick, that I was within an aim's ace of having sent on board a transport for meddling in favour o some rebel scoundrels I thought fit to punish at his gate," exclaimed Carhampton, and with an expression of countenance that in its concentrated malignity was scarcely short of demoniac, he added, jerking his head menu-cingly: "He had better be careful lest [ may put my threat into execution some and." "Look you here, now," said Clonnel, in terposing, "parsons, bishops, and churchmen of every grade, I hate the c'oth ; they are beginning with that insolent, avaricious despot Ager, a self-seeking, greedy, hypocritical lot. I pick but one grain of wheat out of the bushel of chaff, and that man is Berwick. Let him alone. And, faith, I'm sorry for Maurice O'Driscoll ;--not that I think many men are worth being sorry for ;--but his father, Sir Phinius, a jolly old toper and foxhunter, was the most reckless, hospitable and best sample of an Irishman I ever knew. Many a pleasant day I spent with him in Garryowel, where the wine flowed like water and we turned the night into day, and followed the hounds from morn till night. His wife, too, an Englishwoman and a Protestant, was as nice a person as ever I met. Pity any informality in the marriage should have illegalised it and cast her son adrift. I'd help him if I could ; but out of office myself now, what can I do ?" "Psha! the milk of human kindness will never stagnate in your bosom !" cried Beres-ford, ironically. "Methought Carleton's ingratitude had cured you of the weakness of making men-"Worthless wretch !" aspirated Clormel, scowling wrathfully. "O'Driscoll would just pay you in the same coin. Guilford Colandisk is worth a score of such holy humbugs." Clonmel smiled : "Ay, Guilford Colandisk is a cork that would float when a plummet would go to the bottom. He has the great talent of prevaricating with a plausible face, and he is not afflicted with that propensity to veracity that mars many a man's fortune." "Neither does he make wry faces at pleas ure, or set up to be a censor of others by implied deprecation, refusing to join in their amusements or make himself one with them n any "pursuit," fiercely retorted Bereaford, who discerned a latent sneer in the invidious commendation of his friend's eulogist. 'Guilford for my money ; I'm glad the shock. Headed Davidsons have got possession of Garryowel." "I'm not," said Carhampton. "Why ?" cried Beresford, snappishly. Because it will be the means of thrusting the pauper for ever into our path to jostle us

I've scored the backs of fifty with five hundred, that didn't half well deserve the lash as these very knaves. Would I had the handling of them al libitum for a day; and if they did not come to their right mind, and learn wisdom, it were not my fault. Govern ment is too lenient by far with this stiff necked country."

" Hang me, I don't know what more it can do," observed Lord Kingsborough. "1'll trouble you for a little of that excellent Cardo." low ham. The very means taken for the pa-cification of the people, and which would subdue and strike terror into the hearts of any other in the world, appear only to stimulate them to more vigorous resistance. and I'm sure we haven't spared the rod of correction the picket, scourge, pitch-cap, free-quarterings, and half-hangings, have all done their duty ; yet the effervescence is working up to an explosion. I see that."

" Psha ! because you are too indulgent, and only half hang !" jocosely cried lord Nor-bury, chuckling at his own wit. " Look at me, now ! I'm a humane man as any here, and yet in the discharge of my duty I do not lamely halt half-way, else would I have sen-tenced a hundred and ninety-eight men to be whole hanged at one assizes No, sir, the moment I clapped my eyes on every man brought up, that was enough ; with that intnitive perception natural to me, I saw at once he was a culprit, and so pronounced sentence, qualifying it with perhaps a little seasoning jeu d'esprit, to amuse the poor fellow, and reconcile to meet his doom with sang froid, and to do them justice, they are upon the whole good humored enough, and ready to take it well. ' Paddy' says I, once to a wight that looked rather disconsolate, ' don't be down hearted my lad.' He was one of the laborers who had conspired to shoot Carhampton for some little frolic of my noble friend among their wives and daughters .- ' Since this world'isn't a place to your liking, or good enough for you, you ought to be obliged to me for giving you a lift into the other,' 'Thank ye; long life to yer honour,' says the fellow; 'an' if I don't like it I'll come back an' let ye know.' He has never come back ; so I'm to suppose he likes it, ha, ha, But that's my way : the moment a felha ! low is brought before me I know him at: first sight, and give him his conge." "Then you are a physiognomist like Jud-kin Fitzgerald, who can tell a Carmelito traitor by the face, and forthwith apply his reme-dy without troubling us for a fat," said Lord Clonmel.

"Fitzgerald has no right to take the law in his own hands, and in his own parlour flog a man to the bone," retorted Beresford an-grily. . . . He should bring him to the whip-ping-school; but every man in a little authority snaps his finger at the law now-a days, and does just what pleases him."

Because the law gives him latitude, sir," oried Major Swan, brusquely:" "Isn'tit be-cause we are empowered to carry out the designs of the Government, by our coroperation, cap, the pitchcap of more than the scalping efficacy of the Indian's knife, to read the skin from the head, the screet from the brain of the head of being malcontant or the head of the screet from the brain of the head of the screet from the brain of the head of the screet from the brain of the head of the screet from the brain of the head of the screet from the brain of the head of the screet from the brain of the head of the screet from the brain of the head of the screet from the brain of the head of the screet from the brain of the screet from Major Sirr, contemplating Major Swan with affectionate interest, sighed heavily, threw up his eyes, and said, speaking thoughtfully: "We may, by a very simple process arrive at the conclusion we desire. I daresay Mr. Byrne is a very loyal person : far be it from me to incur reprobation by judging or condemning any man unheard : but, then; we cannot accept any man's character of himself on trust. Now, I humbly suggest that if some of the people about the village, say a laborer or two, or some of the domestics were apprehended and questioned, we might elicit some reliable information as to the real opinions and proceedings of that family."

"Questioned !" growled Major Sandys, darting from a pair of wolfish eyes a glance at once savage and contemptuous at Major Sirr. "Are you spoony enough to fancy you'll worm out the truth by questioning such lying knaves?" "Then we'll scourge it out of them, if that will content you," returned Major Sirr, with conciliating demeanour.

"Give them the pitchcap, the picket and the rope; if these won't do, try fire and burn it out of them." said Major Sandys, mollified Let me help you, and see if we don't get some of them to swear a criminal accusation against this tair-faced gentleman, and pull off his sheepskin cloak. If we do succeed as I anticipate, mind I will covenant for a share in the booty; for if he be found treasonable, all the Buckinghams in the kingdom, with the viceroy to boot, can't save his neck from sentence.

"Not in the least," facetiously returned the judge, with a hideous grimace of humour. "I shall never demur to render, by word or deed, to any man his due': but this candidate. being of more note than usually comes within my sphere, must be awarded a funeral oration, to impart solemnity to his exit. ... I must look up the Bible for some appropriate text. There is nothing I like sommeh or more to my taste than weeding the world of maivais sujets, and all objectionable characters." "Would I could minister to your predilection, and hand over Hussy Burgh and Fitzgibbon to your judicial authority, with Magee, and a few more I could name," muttered Lord Clonmel, while lightning flashed from the cyc, scowling beneath his morose brow; "then might I know peace and breathe free once more.

"I shall be happy to oblige you, if ever oc-casion should present itself," returned the udge, with a flourish and gesture of condecension, which sping the ludicrous, set the table in a roar: He was interrupted by Squire Higgins exclaiming :

But what about Byrne of Cabinteely ! Can't ye go a shorter way to work?-Can't ye fiat him?

"Yes, by a lettre de cachet, a good mode of proceeding," observed Carhampton ; " but he is so well hedged in, I doubt if we could
