

of her own son's ability and character.

It gives me much pleasure to do this, because I am so sure of my judgment about Ted that I can write you without even the slightest reservation in regard to the many fine things which I am going to say about him.

The background to my romance is this: for the past twenty-eight years I have been engaged in teaching in four preparatory schools and I feel that I