

tions of objects in their respective localities, and that the light of the eye possesses the qualities of reflection and refraction as all other light does, and to the general light of the universe may be attributed the illumination of all objects, and rendering them visible with the exceptions of shadows, which light renders invisible.

---