

rest was not earned. I could always eat but never be hungry because I was always eating. I might possibly have the love of some good woman but would be haunted by the suspicion that she loved only my money, and I could never have the satisfaction of knowing I was right because I would realize that I was a useless parasite who accomplished nothing.

Greatness, there is no human greatness.