The sublime benediction of life as recorded in the last Will and Testament of Charles Dickens, will ever stand out prominently as a witness bearing upon the point in question, expressed in language as follows: "I commit my soul to the mercy of God through our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ, and exhort my dear children, humbly to try to guide themselves by the teaching of the New Testament."

Tennyson, as he stood at the grave of his dearest friend, looked beyond the narrow tomb to the wide expanse of heaven, and to God himself, and said: "I trust he lives in Thee, and there I find him worthier to be loved." Thus he too declared his faith in the survival of love beyond the confines of death.

Shakespeare as well in his Will, left us an ever illustrious testimony as to his attitude in this all-important issue as foilows: "I commit my soul into the hands of God, my Creator, hoping and assured-
