correspondent : The revolt of the most influential English-speaking elements of the Conservative party in Quebec against their federal leaders at Ottawa is met with a counterblast from the loyal wing in Ontario, the maritime provinces, and the Northwest. The divisions in the party are charged by the Untario Conservatives to the readiness of Quebeo Conservative leaders to sacrifice every-thing to the French-Canadian vote. Reorganization, with the Quebec elementer out, is demanded. The Conservative collapse may prove

The Conservative collapse may prove the thin edge of a weage threatening the whole system of party government in Canada. Independents all over the country profess to see a new era of non-party government coming, the abolition of the caucus, and the adoption of some method of national administration by federal councils chosen by an elected federal (assembly. by an elected federal assembly.

A well informed Liberal writer, discussing in Golowin Smith's paper, The Weekly Sun, the present condition of partyism in the Dominion, declares "there is no Liberal party now in Canada." There is apparently no object to be striven for oy the Liberals kx-cept power to grab everything in high, no high principle upon which true Liberals can take their stand, and the electors are expected "to support men in office for the sake of benefits to themselves and their friends, the wife pullers and wire heelers who are fattening at the country's expense." What the so-called Conservative party is composed of or is driving at he does not care to describe.
