First of all the temperance people asked for provincial prohibition, but, of course, as they expected, the government refused absolutely to countenance such a proposition. As an alternative the temperance people asked that the office of liquor license commissioner be made elective, and not as at present an office of government appointment. This the government unqualisfiedly refused to concede.

As a third proposition the temperance people asked that a person intending to open a barroom in any district be first compelled to secure the signatures
