LIFE IMPRISONMENT FOR FRANK HENWOOD

Denver, Col., July 28.—Frank H. Henwood was today sentenced to life imprisonment for killing George E. Copeland while shooting at Louis Von Phul, an aeronaut of St. Louis, whom he also killed, in a barn here on May 24, last.

When asked if he had anything to say why sentence should not be pronounced, he burst into a tirade and using dramatic gestures denounced the public prosecutor and the court. Henwood declared to the court that his trial had been turned into a preliminary hearing of the Springer divorce trial. He asserted that while the prosecutor had denounced him as a destroyer of Mr. Springer's home he was and is in reality John W. Springer's best friend.

Judge Whitford said: "I am not surprised at your state of mind since you have been surrounded by all classes of prisoners, fourteen of whom I recently sent there. I am of the opinion that the verdict of the jury in your case should have been first degree murder. I believe that you shot Von Phul because of jealousy over Mrs. Springer. But for some reason the jurors returned a finding of second degree murder. The law leaves the sentence to the discretion of the court. It is the verdict of this court that you shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary at Carson City for life."

Henwood's attorney, John T. Bottom, announced that he would appeal.

You Should Tremble And Shudder

When an unscrupulous druggist offers you a substitute for DR. FOWLER'S EXTRACT OF WILD STRAWBERRY.

If you are suddenly attacked by DIARRHOEA, DYSENTERY, COLIC, CHOLERA OR AILS IN THE STOMACH, CHOLERA MORBUS, SPASMS, COMPLAINT, or any LOOSENESS OF THE BOWELS, do not experiment with some new and untried remedy, but get one that has stood the test of time.

For 65 years this wonderful medicine has been used in thousands of homes in Canada, and has given universal satisfaction. When you want a bottle of "Dr. Fowler's," insist on being given what you ask for, as these no-name, no-recipe preparations may be dangerous to your health.

Mr. J. Castle, Totoka, Man., writes: "Just a word in favor of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, which I used last summer for Cramps in the Stomach and Diarrhoea. I was very sick for a week and not able to do anything until I purchased a bottle of the above remedy, and after three or four doses I was well as ever."

The price is 35 cents per bottle. See that the name, The T. Millburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont., appears on the label, as we are the manufacturers and sole proprietors of this remedy.

Germany in Morocco

Her Policy for Years to Gain Footing There --- Discovered Rights When Anglo-French Agreement Was Made --- Germans Expect Government to Acquire Sus Country, Rich in Minerals, with Agadir as Its Port

MONS. PAUL CAMBON. SIR EDWARD GREY. SIR FRANCIS BERTIE.

(Special Correspondence of N.Y. Post) Berlin, July 29.—The inevitable always comes as a surprise. It is therefore not to be wondered at that a gasp of amazed alarm went up from every capital in Europe at the news that Germany had at last taken a step to which for years her own policy and the course of events have been impelling her and laid the mailed fist upon a portion of Morocco. From the time of the Emperor William's demonstration at Tangier, the stormy march of Moroccan history has trended steadily that way, and now the German flag is at Agadir, not to be withdrawn, unless all indications deceive, as long as the French flag remains not only at Fez but at Casablanca. The deadly immovability of the Imperial Foreign Office since the French advance on Fez was sufficient evidence that something notable was preparing. Herr von Kiderlen has now shown his hand and has called forth such a storm of enthusiastic approval throughout Germany that it will be impossible for the government to retreat without having something very tangible to show in the way of spoils. Incidentally nothing could have come more pat for the needs of a government annually short of assets to show on its election balance-sheet.

The primary cause of Germany's discovery that she had rights and a future in Morocco was the Anglo-French agreement concerning that country. Up to that time her policy had been to encourage France to entangle herself to her heart's content in Africa, in the hope that if given rope enough she would certainly hang herself and come to be a danger in Europe. The policy had the special merit that it kept France on perpetual bad terms with England, which greatly endeared it to Bismarck. The French, of course, perfectly understood the motives of Germany's ready acquiescence in the annexation of Tunis and Madagascar to Bismarck. The French, of course, perfectly understood the motives of Germany's ready acquiescence in the annexation of Tunis and Madagascar to Bismarck. The French, of course, perfectly understood the motives of Germany's ready acquiescence in the annexation of Tunis and Madagascar to Bismarck.

It was then that the Pan-German eye first fixed itself upon Morocco as a site for German colonization. German mining prospectors swarmed over the country. Mining rights were secured, large estates were bought, and a considerable stake in the country created in a few years. The leaders in this economic penetration were the well-known Mannesmann brothers, owners of the great steel tube business, who at one time claimed a practical monopoly of mining throughout Morocco in virtue of a concession from Mulai Hafid, which, however, their own government disallowed. They have nevertheless mineral rights and great landed possessions in many parts of the country. Reinhardt Mannesmann has an account of their habit of giving trouble and requiring support at inconvenient moments, if Germany ever has a colony in Morocco the first status set up there should be the Mannesmanns.

Rich Slopes of the Atlas. It was soon discovered that the southern slopes of the Atlas were full of copper, lead and iron, and as all these things, and especially the iron, were needed in Germany the idea of a partition of the country took root and grew. It is an idea which has much to recommend it. The Algerian convention has proved the most preposterous piece of diplomatic humbug of our time. Before the ink on it was well dry the Sultan, whom the twelve powers had solemnly pledged themselves to maintain in the full possession of his rights and sovereignty, was deposed and nothing but French bayonets stand between his successor and the same fate. Whatever Sultan is set up will go the same way. He will come to the throne burdened with debt to France, and necessarily under French influence. In consequence he will quickly be engaged in civil war with his own subjects, who will not accept a ruler who is a mere creature of the hated unbelievers, and again French armies will have to rescue him from the vengeance of the tribesmen. Meanwhile the country is a constant source of danger and disquiet in Europe. Once divided it would cease to be an apple of discord, the treasures supposed to be hidden beneath its stony hillsides would be dragged to light, wheat and cattle would cover its fertile plains, and the desert of today would blossom like the rose. How the Moroccans would appreciate this transformation is an other matter.

Of course much ink will have flowed from diplomatic pens before these things come to pass. For the present the diplomatic position is briefly as follows: Germany has intimated that her warships will remain at Agadir until orderly conditions have been restored in Morocco, she herself being the judge who will decide when such conditions again exist. Order, of course, in the usual sense of the word never existed in Morocco in historic times. The Roman nor the Arab ever held untroubled dominion in the land. Germany, however, has intimated that she considers the presence of the French and Spanish troops as the chief cause of the disorders, and presumably will not withdraw until these fomenters of unrest have departed. She has therefore intervened in Morocco to restore peace, though not so noisily as France and Spain, since she will remain in the country as long as they do, Germany has thus abandoned the moral advantage which she hitherto enjoyed as having no particular ends of her own to serve in Morocco, and has come down into the arena avowedly to scramble for her own material interests.

Her main interest appears to be located in the south, and there can be little doubt that the German people as a whole expect their government to secure for them the possession of the Sus country with Agadir as its port. To get the rest of the country would have to be abandoned to France and Spain. It is not an arrangement that France will like, but it seems to be the only condition upon which she can acquire the bulk of Morocco for herself. England will have a word to say as to the establishment of a German port and coaling station on the Atlantic coast of Morocco, but will probably follow the lead of France. Both England and Italy are debarred by their agreements with France from claiming a share in the spoils for themselves, England in return for French concessions in Egypt, and Italy for French compliance over Tripoli.

Neutralization of Tangier. England will require the neutralization of Tangier and the adjoining strip of Mediterranean coast, together with guarantees that no fortifications shall be erected there. A clause to this effect formed part of the original Anglo-French agreement respecting Morocco, and will undoubtedly be insisted on to the cannon's mouth by the British Admiralty. Tangier in the hands of a Power that could fortify it would halve the value of Gibraltar. As it is, Gibraltar commands the entrance to the Mediterranean. If Tangier were fortified an enemy could pass the Straits under cover of its guns. The English in case of need can claim a historic right of pre-emption over Tangier, which was once a British possession, having been abandoned by that eminent little Englander, Charles II, on grounds of economy. Needless to say, discussion of this matter is strictly discouraged in official quarters in Berlin. There
