Horse Interfering

James Holcomb, writing to the Horseshoers' Journal, says: I have found many cases of front interfering due to narrow chest and knock-kneed conditions. If you will notice a horse that is narrow chested nonce a norse that is narrow chested and knock-kneed most always is found to have small feet. They are hollow soled and very upright. I consider this kind the very hardest of all to cure, but if I can get hold of one before his hoofs are cut away by the knife and rasp I have some hope of effecting a cure; but the trouble is with some men, they reduce the size of hoof when they should do all they can to build up.

With a large pair of front feet there is much more steadiness in the moveis much more steadness in the move-ment and the horse has much more confidence in taking his steps, but with a little chopped off pair of feet there is inclined to be a choppy, un-steady action, and instead of the feet steady action, and the front they dip in or out and any way which the leg muscles may incline them, being di-rected largely by the falseness of step which they make.

I wish to say this of such horses: A square-toed shoe of good weight is the kind I have found best to use. Now, the square must not necessar-ily be directly in front of the hoof, but in placing the shoe to the hoof the true line of leg centre should be considered and the shoe fitted accorconsidered and the shoe fitted accor-dingly. Then when the horse moves he will be compelled, somewhat, to roll the toe as the square-toed shoe indicates he should.

A broad web, both sides of same weight, and the inside edge cleaned up and well rounded; this is about all that is necessary. For if such horses as I have described are possible of cure from front interfering they will at least show improvement through the means I have offered, but it must not be forgotten that when "two legs come out of the same hole," a sayino attributed to such as these, it's a hard job to bring about a cure, for they were made to hit themselves, and at the business. at the business.

"In this cage," said the keeper, "we have a splendid specimen of the Pelicanus Australis, or Austrian peli-can. It is noted, as you see, for the enormous size of its bill---" "I don't see, anything

"I don't see anything remarkable about it," observed the man who had just settled with the gas company, passing on.
