- "I made another garden, yea,
 For my new love;
 I left the dead rose where it lay,
 And set the new above.
 Why did the summer not begin?
 Why did my heart not haste?
 My old love came and walked therein,
 And laid the garden waste.
- "She entered with her weary smile, Just as of old; She looked around a little while, And shivered at the cold. Her passing touch was death to all, Her passing look a blight; She made the white rose petals fall, And turned the red rose white.
- "Her pale robe clinging to the grass Seemed like a snake That bit the grass and ground, alas, And a sad trail did make. She went up slowly to the gate, And there, just as of yore, She turned back at the last to wait And say farewell once more."

Arthur O'Shaughnessy. FOR MARSE CHOUCHOUTE.

"An' now, young man, w'at you want to remember is this—an' take it fer yo motto: No monkey shines with Uncle Sam. Yo understan'? You aware now o' the penalties attached to monkey-shinin' with Uncle Sam. I reckon that's 'bout all I got to say; so you be on han' promp' to-morrow mornin' at 7 o'clock to take charge o' the United States mail-bag."

This formed the close of a very pom pous address delivered by the master of Centreville to young Armand Verchette who had been appointed to carry the mails from the village to the railway station, three miles away.

Armand - or Couchoute, as every chose to call him, following th habit of the creoles in giving nick-names — had listened a little im-

Not so the little negro boy who had accompanied him. The child had listened with the deepest respect and awe to every word of the rambling admonition.

"How much you gwine git, Mars Chouchoute?" he asked, as they walked down the village street together, the black boy a little behind. He was very black and slightly deformed; a small boy, scarcely reaching to the shoulder of his companion, whose castoff garments he wore.

But Chouchoute was tall for his six teen years and carried himself well.
"W'y I'm goin' to git thirty dolla, a month, Wash. W'at you say to that? Betta 'an hoein' cotton, a'nt it?" He laughed with a triumphant ring in his

But Wash did not laugh. He was too much impressed by the importance of this new function, too much bewildered by the vision of sudden wealth which thirty dollars a month meant to his understanding.

He felt, too, deeply conscious of the great weight of responsibility which this new office brought with it. The imposing salary had confirmed the impression left by the postmaster's words.

"You gwine get all dat money?
Sakes! W'at you reckon Ma'me Armand say? I know she gwine mos takes a fit wen she heah dat."

But Chouchoute's mother did "most take a fit" when she heard of her son's good fortune. The white and wasted hand which rested upon the boy's black curls trembled a little, it is true, and tears of emotion came into her tired eyes. This step seemed to her the beginning of better things for her fatherless boy.

They lived quite at the end of this little French village, which was simply two long rows of very old frame houses, facing one another closely across a dusty roadway.

Their home was a cottage, so small and so humble that it just escaped the reproach of being a cabin. Every one was kind to Mme. Armand.

Neighbors ran in of mornings to help with her work she could do so little for herself. And often the good priest, Pere Antoine, came to sit with her and talk innocent gossip.

To say that Wash was fond of Mme. Armand and her son is to be poor in language to express devotion worshiped her as if she were already an angel in paradise.

Chouchoute was a delightful young fellow; no one could help loving him His heart was as warm and cheery as his own Southern sunbeams. If he was born with an unlucky trick of forget fulness - or, better, thoughtlessness no one ever felt much like blaming him for it, so much did it seem a part of his happy, careless nature. And why was faithful watchdog always at Marso Chouchoute's heels, if it were not to be hands and ears and eyes to him, more than half the time?

One beautiful spring night Chouchoute, on his way to the station, was riding along the road that skirted the The clumsy mail bag that lay before him across the pony was almost empty, for the Centreville mail was a meagre and unimportant one at best. But he did not know this. He was not thinking of the mail, in fact; he was only feeling that life was very agreeable this delicious spring night

There were cabins at intervals upor the road-most of them darkened, for the hour was late. As he approached one of these, larger than the others, he heard the sound of a fiddle, and saw lights through the openings of the

It was so far from the road that when he stopped his horse and peered through the darkness he could not recognize the dancers who passed before the open doors and windows. But he knew this was Gros Leon's ball, which he had But he knew heard the boys talking about all the week. Suppose he should stand in the doorway an instant and exchange a word with the dancers. It would not take a Chouchoute dismounted, fastened his horse to the fence-post and proceeded toward the house.

The room, crowded with people, and desparation.

Uncle Ben, playing upon a squeaky fiddle and shouting the "figures."

"Ah! v'la Chouchoute!" some one called. "Eh! Chouchoute!"

"Eh! Chouchoute; yere's
"Just in time, Chouchoute; yere's Miss Leontine waitin' fer a partna."
"S'lute yo' partnas?" Uncle Ben was thundering forth; and Chouchoute, with one hand gracefully behind him, made a profound bow to Miss Leontine, as he offered her the other.

rough beams across the ceiling, black-ened by smoke and time. Upon the high mantel-piece a single coal-oil lamp burned, and none too brightly.

boards laid across two flour barrels, sat

In a far corner, upon the platform of Now Chouchoute was noted far and wide for his skill as a dancer. The moment he stood upon'the floor a fresh spirit to enter into all present. was with renewed vigor that uncle Ben intoned his "Balancy all! Fus fo'ard an' back !'

The spectators drew close about the couples to watch Chouchoute's wonderful dancing.

"It takes Chouchoute to show 'em de step, va!" proclaimed Gros Leon, with fat satisfaction, to the audience at large. "Look 'im! look 'im yonda! Ole Ben got to work' 'an dat if he want to keep up wid Chouchoute, va!' So it was encouragement and adulation on all sides, till, from the praise that was showered on him, Chouchoute's head was as light as his feet. At the windows appeared the dusky faces of the negroes, their bright eyes gleaming as they viewed the scene within and mingled their loud guffaws with the medley of sound that was almost deafening. The time was speeding. The air was heavy in the room, but no one seemed to mind this. Uncle Ben was calling the figures now with a rhythmic sing-song:

"Right an' lef' all 'roun'! Swing co'nas !

Chouchoute turned with a smile to Miss Felicie on his left, his hand ex-tended, when, what should break upon his ear but the long, harrowing wail of locomotive.

Then he vanished from the room. Miss Felicie stood as he left her, with hand uplifted, rooted to the spot with astonishment.

It was the train whistling for his station, and he a mile or more away He knew he was too late, and that he could not make the distance; but the sound had been a rude remainder that he was not at his post of duty. However, he would do what he could

He ran swiftly to the other road, and to the spot where he had left his pony.

The horse was gone, and with it the United States mail bag! For an instant Chouchoute stood halfstunned with terror. Then, in one quick flash, come to his mind a vision of possibilities that sickened him. Disgrace overtaking him in this position of trust; poverty his portion again, and his dear mother forced to share both with him.

He turned, desperate, to some negroes who had followed him, seeing his wild rush from the house. "Who saw my hoss? W't you all did with my hoss, say?" "Who you reckon tech yo' hoss.

boy?" grumbled Gustave, a sullen-looking mulatto. "You didn't have no call to lef' 'im in de road, fus'

"Pear to me like I headed a hose a-loping down de road jes' now, didn you, Uncle Jake?" ventured a second. Neva heahed nuttin'-nuttin' 'cept' dat big mouf Ben in yonda makin' mo' fuss 'an a t'unda sto'm "Boys!" cried Chouchoute excitedly, bring me a hoss, quick, one of you. I'm boun' to have one! I'm boun' to; I'll give two dolla to the firs' man brings me a hoss.' Near at hand, in the "lot" that adjoined Uncle Jake's cabin, was his little creole pony, nibbling the cool, wet grass that he found along the edges and in the converse. edges and in the corners of the fence.

The negro led the pony forth. With no further word and with one bound Chouchoute was upon the animal's back. He wanted neither saddle nor bridle, for there were few horses in the neighborhood that had not been trained to be guided by the simple motions of the rider's body

Once mounted, he threw himself forward with a certain violent impulse, leaning till his cheek touched the animal's mane.

He uttered a sharp "Hei!" and at once, as if possessed by sudden frenzy, the horse dashed forward, leaving the bewildered black man in a cloud of dust

What a mad ride it was! On one side was the river bank, steep in places and crumbling away; on the other an unbroken line of fencing, now in straight lines of neat planking, now treacherous barbed wire, some times the zigzag rail.

The night was black, with only such faint light as the stars were shedding. No sound was to be heard save the quick thud of the horse's hoofs upon the hard dirt road, the animal's heavy breathing and the boys feverish "hei, hei!" when he fancied the speed slack

Occasionally a marauding dog started from the obscurity to bark and give useless chase.
"To the road, to the road, Bon-arien!" panted Chouchoute, for the horse in his wild race had approached so closely to the river's edge that the bank crumbled beneath his flying feet was only by a desperate lunge and bound that he saved himself and rider from plunging into the water below

Chouchoute hardly knew what he was pursuing so madly. It was rather something that drove him—fear, hope young and old, was long and low, with He was rushing to the station, because it seemed to him, naturally, the first thing to do. There was the faint hope that his own horse had broken rein and gone there of his own accord but such hope was almost lost in a wretched conviction that had seized him the instant he saw "Gustave the thief" among the men gathered at Gros Leon's.

"Hei! hei! Bon-a-rien!"

The lights of the railway station were gleaming ahead, and Chouchoute's hot ride was almost at an end With a sudden and strange perversity of purpose Chouchoute, as he drew closer upon the station, slackened his horse's speed. A low fence was in his way. Not long before he would have cleared it at a bound — for Bon-a-rien could do such things. Now he cantered easily to the end of it to go through the gate

His courage was growing faint and his heart sinking within him as he drew nearer and nearer.

He dismounted, and, holding the pony by the mane, approached with trepidation the young stationmaster, who was taking note of some freight that had been deposited near the tracks

"Mr. Hudson," faltered Chouchoute. "did you see my pony 'roun' yere any where? an'—an' the—the mail-sack?' "Your pony's safe in the woods, hou'te. The mail bag's on its way to Chou'te. New Orleans—"
"Thank God!" breathed the boy.

"But that poor little black fellow of yours has about done it for himself, I "Wash? Oh, Mr. Hudson! w'atsw'ats happen' to Wash?" "He's inside on my mattress. He's hurt, and he's hurt bad; that's what's the matter. You see the 10:45 train had come in, and she didn't make much of a stop; she was just pushing out when, bless me! if that little chap of yours didn't come tearing along on Spunky as if Old Harry was behind him.

"You know how No. 32 can pull at the start; and there was that little imp keeping abreast of her 'most under the thing's wheels.
"I shouted at him. I couldn't make out what he was up to, when blamed if he didn't pitch the mail bag clean into the car! Buffalo Bill couldn't have done it neater.

"Then Spunky, she shied; and Wash he bounced against the side of that car and back like a rubber ball and laid in the ditch till we carried him inside. I've wired down the road for Dr. Campbell to come up on No. 14 and do what he can for him.

Hudson had related these events to the distracted boy while they made their way towards the house.

Inside, upon a low pallet, lay the little negro, breathing heavily, his black face pinched and ashen with approaching death. He had wanted no one to touch him further than to lay him upon the bed, The few men and colored women gathered in the room were looking upon him with pity mingled with curiosity. When he saw Chouchoute he closed his eyes and a shiver passed through his small frame. Those about him thought he was dead. Chouchoute knelt, choking, at his side and held his hand.

"Oh, Wash, Wash! Wat you did that for? Wat made you, Wash?"
"Marse Chouchoute," the boy whispered, so low that no one could hear him but his friend, "I was gwine long de big road, pas' Marse Gros Leon's, an' I seed Spunky tied dah wid de mail. Dar warn't a minute—I 'clar', Marse Chouchoute, dar warn't a minute —to fetch you. W'at makes my head tu'n' round dat way?"

"Neva mind, Wash; keep still don't you try to talk," entreated Chouchoute. "You ain't mad, Marse Chouchoute?"

The lad could only answer with a hand pressure. "Dar warn't a minute, so I gits top o' Spunky- I neva seed nuttin' cl'ar de road like dat. I came 'long sidede train-an fling de sack. I seed 'in kotch it, and I don't know nuttin' mo' 'cept' mis'ry, till I see you a-coming frough de do. Mebby Mme. Armand know some pin," he murmured faintly,
"wat gwine make my—head quit tu'nin' 'round that way, I bount' to git well; 'case who—gwine—watch Marse—Chouchoute?" — Kate Chopin, in Youth's Companion:

And I thought to myself, wonder if any invisible one is bending out of heaven to-day calling me to hasten away from the gloom and shadow of earth-life and join the shining ones in Paradise. I wonder if the dear child we lost, or the cherished friend from whom we were forever separated by unhappy destiny, is stooping earthward with yearning love as we toil and trudge through the shadows, calling us evermore to the beautiful rest that awaits us. I wonder if the path would seem so long and so dreary if once in a while the lovely picture might flash across the celestial way of dear ones bending down and calling with outstretched arms and faithful love? I wonder if we should lose heart so often and almost forget the simple faith of happier years if some vision could come to us now and then, such as came to me while I walked in the valley. Dear heart, be sure of it-they are up there on the heights waiting and watching as surely as God Himself is in heaven, and some day, suddenly hearing their sweet voices break through the dullness of mortal sense, we shall drop the burden of heavy hearts and climb to where they stand. — "Amber," in Chicago

"It leads them all," is the general reply of druggists when asked about the merit or sales of Hood's Sarsaparilla.

REDMOND O'HANLON.

Redmond O'Hanlon, the most noted of the Irish brigands, after distinguishing himself through the most daring deeds, met his vanquisher at last in a shopkeeper's apprentice.

The youth's master, having to receive a round sum of money in Newry, was afraid to risk an encounter with Redmond or some of his gang on his return to Dundalk, his native town. In his perplexity, his apprentice, sixteen years of age, offered his services, which, after some hesitation, were accepted. The youth, in the words of Mr. Cosgrove, author of the "Irish Rogues and Rapparees," went to the field and brought home an old vicious screw—much of the same humor with Sir Teague O'Ragan's war horse, on which he rode out to meet Duke Schomberg, after the surrender of Charlemont — that, when any other came up to meet him on the road, he always strove to bite or kick him, by which means he commonly kept the road to himself.

As he wended on his way he was over-taken by a well-dressed gentleman, with whom he freely entered into discourse, making no secret of his business or of his expectations of being about the same place on his return to-morrow with one hundred pounds in his possession.

"I wonder," said the fellow-traveler. "you are so free in your communica-tions with strangers; how can you tell but that I may be Redmond O'Hanlon or one of his gang?"

"Oh, oh!" said the boy, bursting out laughing, "such a nice-looking gentleman as you to be a robber! Do you think I haven't eyes!"

"Well, at all events, I advise you to be more discreet. Redmond is famous at disguises, and will pin you if he gets wind of your business. Here's a crown for you to drink my health, but keep a bridle on your tongue."
The grateful youth, sobering at once, made the promise.

And, even as the boy expected, the centleman overtook him as he was returning next day, and conversation was resumed.

"Well, my boy, I suppose from your looks you have not met with any b company, and your money is safe?" "Indeed it is, sir; many thanks for our good advice.' "How are you carrying it?" "In the two ends of this ticket wallet.

"Dear me! I would like to feel the weight of it out of curiosity," and he approached, but the horse lashed out, and he was obliged to keep his distance "Throw over the wallet," he said, rather sternly for such a nice spoken gentleman. "Oh, sir, honey, sure you wouldn't rob me? What would the master say?" "I don't know, but this is what I say: If you don't surrender it at once. I will send a bullet through you, and another through your garran. "I promised my master not to let myself be robbed till I was in danger of my life. Here is the money, but you must take the trouble of crossing the ditch for it. So saying he heaved the bag over the slough that bordered the road and the hedge beyond it in the next field. This annoyed the highwayman, but, judging the prize worth the trouble, he dismounted, scrambled over the dyke and fence higher up, and laid hands on the bag. Hearing a clatter he raised his head, and, looking over the fence, saw the innocent youth making the road to Dundalk short on Redmond's good steed, and the vicious peast prancing about longing for some one to fly at.

He was enraged for being so taken in, but much more when he found the two ends of the precious wallet containing nothing more valuable than the copper half-pence of the time, value for thirty or forty shillings.

So there we must leave our outlaw, encumbered with his copper, and not daring to lay hands on the ill-tempered, dangerous garran left at his discretion. The boy arrived safe in Dundalk with the hundred guineas quilted in his waistcoat. After many escapes from armed foes and from prisons, O'Hanlon was treacherously killed by his own fosterbrother for the reward—an almost unprecedent crime in Ireland. His followers were obliged, by most solemn oath, never to shed blood unless in self-defence, never to rob a poor person or to offer violence to a woman.

"Men die, but their work lives on, We are all building pyramids, not to last four thousand years, but forty thousand, forty million, forty trillion forty quadrillon, forty quintillion. All the good words or bad words we speak are spread out into one layer for a pyramid. All the kind deeds or the malevolent deeds we do are spread out into another layer. All the Christian or un-Christian example we set is spread out into another layer. indirect influences of our lives are spread out into another layer. Then the time soon comes when we put down the implements of toil and pass away but the pyramid stands."-T. DeWitt Talmage

A HAPPY HINT—We don't believe in keeping a good thing when we hear of it, and for this reason take special pleasure in recommending those suffering with Piles in any form, blind, bleeding, protruding, etc., to Betton's Pile Salve, the best and safest remedy in the world, the use of which cuts short a vast deal of suffering and inconvenience. Send 50 cts to the Winkelmann & Brown Drug Co., Baltimore, Md., or ask your druggist to order for you.

The superjority of Mother Grayes' Worm

The superiority of Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator is shown by its good effects on the children. Purchase a bottle and give it a trial.

CURRAN'S BON MOTS.

Curran's conversation was singularly brilliant. Byron, who only knew him when, in the evening of his life, it had lost much of its radiant vivacity, thus writes of it: "His imagination is beyond human, and his humor — it is difficult to define what is wit-perfect. He has fifty faces and twice as many voices when he mimics. I have never met his equal." "Curran, Curran is met his equal." he writes again, struck me most. Such imagination There never was anything like it."

And again, "I have heard that may speak more poetry than I have ever seen written, though I have seen him but seldom." We shall endeavor to give some specimens, some of which have never seen the light. On an April afternoon, Curran, walking in the garden of the late Judge Fletche which had been exposed, owing to the walling in, on the Judge's observing that his rows of broccolin were backward, Curran said, "Consider they have been exposed to much dust, and look as they had been after a long march "(March). A barrister entered the hall one day, with his wig very much awry, and of which, not at all apprised, he was obliged to endure from every observer some laughing remark, until, addressing Mr. Curran, mark, until, addressing Mr. Curran, he said: "Do you see anything ridic-ulous in this wig?" The answer instantly was: "Nothing but the head." A bill of indictment had been sent up to a grand jury, in which Mr. Curran was interested. On one of the Curran was interested. On one of the jurors, whose stupidity vexed Curran, coming into court to explain why they ignored it, Curran said, "O just write on the back 'ignoramus,' for self and fellows. It will then be a true bill. A miniature painter, upon his crossexamination by Curran, was made to confess that he had attempted to put his arm around the waist of a particular lady. "Then, sir, said Curran, "I suppose you took that waist (waste) for a common." "No man," said Curran, "but a weak-minded barrister should be admitted to the bar who has not an independent property. "May I ask," said Curran, "ho many acres it takes to make a wise Curran was once challenged by a barrister named Burrows, supposed to be in an incurable decline. When they met, Curran's second came to him and said, "The second of your antagonist requests, as his principal is in a very feeble condition, that he may be allowed to lean against the mile stone where he is standing during the exchange shots."

up a slip of paper: "Try men by night! my lord, forbare! Think what the wicked world will say; Methinks I bear the rogues declare That justice is not done by Day."

Curran, with a twinkle of his eye,

"Certainly,"

Judge Day smiled, and adjourned the The Judge, a very tall man, was in the habit of walking with a very little man, Sir Arthur Clarke, who was a knight, and was called, from keepbaths, off Great George's street "Knight of the bath," and who was married to Lady Morgan's sister. "There goes," said the wit, seeing them, "the longest day and the shortest night" (knight). Curran and the celebrated Dublin tobacconist, Lundy Foot, whose name was worth a snuff, were great friends, and Foot one day asked him for a motto for his coach. asked him for a moto for his coach, "Certainly," said Curran, "I give you a good Latin one, 'Quid rides.'
Curran died in London, in October, 1817, and was buried in Paddington, give where his remains rested until 1834 when they were deposited temporarily in the mausoleum at Lyons, in the county of Kildare, the friend and client, Lord Clancurry, until his monument of granite at Glasnevin cemetery, near Dublin, was complete. Beneath it, built on the complete. Beneath it, built on the model of the tomb of Scipio, he now sleeps, with the simple but strong word above him-Curran

The solemn face, the downcast eye.
The words constrained and cold—
These are the homage, poor at best,
Of those outside the fold.

They know not how our God can play
The Babe's, the Brother's part:
They dream not of the ways He has
Of getting at the heart.

Week-Kneed Christians.

Rev. Father Hayes, pastor of St. Francis de Sales' Church, Newark, preached last Sunday on the necessity of Catholics observing due decorum and reverence when coming into the presence of our Divine Lord in the Blessed Sacrament of the altar. He referred to the carelessness of some of the people at their devotions in church, and instanced cases of the effects of good examples upon non-Catholics.

His remarks were especially for that class of Catholic Christians who are so niggardly in "rendering to God the things that are God's," that they give grudgingly the two hours out of the 168 in the week to do Him honor. With a spasmodic jerk of the knee, that is intended for a genuflection, they dodge into a pew, not at all improbable one that somebody else pays for, and automatically go through the form of service. His sermon was full of practical points that should be remembered.

The Lungs, Liver, Kidneys, Bowels, &c., act as so many waste gates for the escape of effete matter and gases from the body. The use of Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery helps them to discharge their duty. Mr. W. H. Lester, H. M. Customs, Toronto, writes: "I have personally tested the health-giving properties of Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, and can testify as to its great value."

The importance of keeping the blood in a pure condition is universally known, and yet there are very few people who have perfectly pure blood. The taint of scrofula, sait rheum, or other foul humor is heredited and transmitted other foul humor is heredited and transmitted for generations, causing untold suffering, and we also accumulate poison and germs of dis-

we also accumulate poison and germs of disease from the air we breathe, we eat, or we drink. nothing clusively than the power of Hood's Sarsaparilla over all diseases of the blood. This medicine, when fairly tried, does expel every trace of serofula or catarrh, neutralizes the aeidity and cures rheumatism, drives out the germs of malaria, blood poisoning, etc. It also vitalizes and enriches the blood, thus overcoming that tired feeling, and building up the whole system. Thousands testify to the superiority of Hood's Sarsaparilia as a blood purifier. Full information and statements of cures sent free.

tried, does expel every trace of

Hood's

Sarsaparilla 100 Doses One Dollar

EDUCATIONAL.

ST. JOSEPH'S ACADEMY. — UNDER the direction of the Sisters of the Holy Names of Jesus and Mary. Amherstburg. Ont. This educational establishment highly recommends itself to the favor of parents anxions to give to their daughters a solid and useful education. The scholastic year, comprising ten months, opens at the beginning of September and closes in July. Terms that yearly in advance): Board and tuttion, per annum, $70; music and use of piano, $34; drawing and painting, $15; bed and bedding, $10; washing, $12. For further information apply to the Sister Superior.

A SSUMPTION COLLEGE, SANDWICH, Ont.—The studies embrace the Classical and Commercial courses. Terms, including all ordinary expenses, $150 per annum. For full particulars apply to Rev. D. Cushing, C. S. B.

ST. JEROME'S COLLEGE.

BERLIN, ONT. Complete Classical, Philosophical and Commercial Courses,

And Shorthand and Typowriting. For further particulars apply to REV. THEO. SPETZ, President.

provided I am allowed to lean against the next milestone." Judge Day, a very excellent and amiable judge, ST. MICHAEL'S COLLEGE, TORONTO, Ont.—In affiliation with Toronto University. Under the patronage of His Grace the Archishopo to Toronto, and directed by the Basilian Fathers. Full classical, scientific and commer-tal courses, Special courses for students preparing for University matriculation and non-professional certificates. Terms, when paid in advance: Board and tuttion, $150 per year; half boarders, $75; day pupils, $28. For further particulars apply to REV. J. R. TEEFY, President. once in the endeavor to bring the assizes to a close, continued a trial until near midnight, when Curren sent

OWEN SOUND, ONTARIO,
Is the Very Best Place in Canada to get a Therough
Business Education. TAKE A ROUND TRIP and visit a'l other Bust-

Belleville Business college

BELLEVILLE, ONT. Holds the Highest Reputation for Thoroughness.

Our Graduates have upparalelled success. A book of valuable and reliable informa-tion SENT FREE. Belleville Business College.

The only ground-floor Business College in

BELLEVILLE, ONT. Ontario Business College Belleville, Out. 23rd

SEND FOR THE NEW CIRCULAR. IT will help you to decide about your future. Be careful to address, ROBINSON & JOHNSON, Ontario Business College

BELLEVILLE, ONT. PEGG DROP us a postal we will send you a copy of our New Annual Announcement. It will surprise and interest you. Thorough courses in Book-keeping and Shorthand. GEO. S. BEAN, B.A., LL.B.

A. BLANSHARD, Char. Acc. Principals Peterboro Eus. College.

PETERBOROUGH. ONT.

PROFESSIONAL. CHARLES J. McCABE, B.A., BARRIS-TER, Solicitor, Conveyancer, etc., 69 Adelaide street east, Toronto.

POST & HOLMES, ARCHITECTS.—Offices Rooms 28 and 29 Manning House, King street west, Toronto. Also in the Gerrie Block, Whitby. A. v. Post, R. A. A. W. Holmes.

D.R. HANAVAN, SURGEON TO "D" Royal School of Infantry. Office and residence, 389 Burwell street, second door from Dundas. L OVE & DIGNAN, BARRISTERS, ETC., to loan. FRANCIS LOVE. R. H. DIGNAN.

DR. WOODRUFF, No. 185 QUEEN'S AVE. Defective vision, impaired hearing, nasal catarrh and troublesome throats. Eyes tested, glasses adjusted. Hours, 12 to 4.

CARRIAGES AND SLEIGHS. W. J. THOMPSON & SON,

Opposite Revere House, London, Opposite Revere House, London, Have always in stock a large assortment of every style of Carriage and Sleigh. This is one of the largest establishments of the kind in the Dominion. None but first-class work turned out. Prices always moderate. McCAR

NO

Mr. Jus an intervie representa columns of "Mr. Me correspond the progre the Irish N prominent Mr. McCa first to op up to that most devo on the sit him to bre he has preschief."

" Do you the civil s the re-est asked. "I am n what may 'I can onl give my re What has the Irish principle, l Not one of and most g Not one o Not one of his part as to an inter tives, time temporarily ality is pur land, or, al not estimat slip in his owed it to sacrificed s go his fig to supplan morally and sufferers, h ward and t ing in Cor as political who wished Parnell, bu and on acco land we sti We used to regard our and would standing h had done for almost like

yet in a ma

"Expect

"Yes, o

remain som bad inform understand

without foo insomonia. fever, and only the s His death h ized. None in sending to his old c of us, too. assemble at be restored he would ha But certain the convicti avenge Par of disorder party — di They have is much over lions of Ir they have o over a few ance and to funeral cer

" But the attitude?" passions, d whom they precisely t break awa have done edge and a Dillon and arose they return they logne with ARRIVIN

> Dillon and ened and more, than Do yo tion imposs " Not at minds were people were Mr. Parne Parne believed. peace. "But ar as to the Irish party

without ef

least there

left on ei

Parnellite "Some o reason. " Why ?" "Don't Parnellite : long the s alone, wit repeat, the

and the fev