Jordan smiled and cast down his eyes.

"And I never thought of it!" muttered Lavarick, with honest shame and remorse. "I never thought of it, so help me! Sir Jordan, you're a clever man, and I admire you! And to prove it I say—done with you."

And he held out his claw-like hand.

say—done with you.'

And he held out his claw-like hand.

Jordan looked at it as if he would rather handle a snake than touch it.

"Good," he said. "That is my one condition. Give me that, and I am content. You may leave the country or—"

"Wait here till you've hit upon a plan for getting me safely lagged and sent back to jail," finished Lavarick, with a grin. "No, thank you. Once I touch the coin Pm off. I did want to stay in the old country a little longer—"

He stopped and his face darkened with an evil scowl.

Jordan watched him.

"Whether you stay or go is your business," he said, coldly. "I have only to arrange for the—the exchange—"

Lavariek noddde.

"Tve thought of that," he said. "Bring the money—I'll take it in notes. Oh, I'm not afraid you'll stop them. You couldn't without causing an inquiry, you know. Bring the notes to Lynne Burrows on Friday night at ten o'clock. I'll meet you by the clump of trees."

at ten o'clock. I'll meet you by the clump of trees."
"Why not bring it here?" asked Joran, thoughtfully.

Lavarick smiled and shook his head.

Lavarick smiled and shook his head. "No, thank you, Sir Jordan. I wouldn't trust mystlf with that precious document in my possession under your roof. You're so clever, you see. Think of your hitting upon the idea of my forging a duplicate! No, no. We're safe, both of us, in the Burrows."

Jordan pondered a moment or two. "Why Friday?" he said, sharply. "The will is not in your possession?"

"Why Friday?" he said, sharply. "The will is not in your possession?"
"Do you mean do I carry it about with me? No, I certainly do not; I'm not such a fool, in fact. You don't carry the Lynne diamonds in your coat pocket, do you? Well, this will's worth almost as much to me as they are to you. I've got it hid away snug and safe, and I'll produce it on Friday, as I say. I'm not afraid you'll go back on me. You can bring Trale if you like. But you know better. What we both of us want is to settle this little affair between ourselves quietly and comfortably."

quietly and comfortably."
"Very well," said Jordan, "I have no more to say," he added, after a pause, and he glanced significantly at the door and laid his hand on the bell.

Lavarick took up the highly respecta-ble hat, which formed part of his dis-guise, then, as if by a sudden impulse, stretched out his hand and motioned Sir stretched out his hand and motioned Sir Jordan not to ring the bell.

"Half a moment," he said, hesitatingly, and looking down at the thick Turkey carpet with a strange and curious expression on his face. "We've arranged one little matter, Sir Jordan; butter's another matter I wanted to speak to you about."

"What is it?," said Jordan, impatiently, and rising as she spoke, as if the man's company grew more intolerable each moment.

Lavarick gnawed at his lip, and evidently made an effort to speak indiffer-rue just this," he said, and his voice was thicker and huskier even than ustal; "you might remember, Sir Jordan, that I"—he paused—"that I've got a daughter!"

Jordan was standing in foots of "It's just this," he said, and his voice was standing in front of his Jordan was standing in front of his chair, and as Lavarick spoke he seemed to grow suddenly stiff and rigid; then he turned to the letters on the small table beside him, so that his back was toward Lavarick, as he replied:

"Well,"—Lavarick paused again, and seemed as if he found it difficult to proced—"she—she was my only child, She was like her mother." He glanced at Bir Jordan as if he expected him to sneer, and meant to resent the sneer if it came; but Jordan looked steadily at the carpet. "Her—her mother was, a good woman, a—a better wife than I deserved, and it was a good job she died before— I was very fond of my little girl, Sir Jordan. You laugh, I dare say, and you think that such as I am haven't any right to feelings."

"I was not laughing," said Jordan,

"I was not laughing," said Jordan, quietly, and without raising his eyes.
"Go on."
"What!" he said, almost ina quietly, and without raising his eyes. "Go on."

"Go on."

"Well," resumed Lavarick, huskily, "my girl was all the world to me, and off anything would have kept me straight, she would; but I'm one of those who can't go straight. I suppose there's something in the blood that drives a man to the devil whether he will or won't. I'm a bad lot, I know; but I was fond and proud of my girl, and the worst part of the business when I was sent off was the thought that I was leaving her all alone and without any leaving her all alone and without any one to look after her." He paused and cleared his throat.

He paused and cleared his throat.

"It was the dreadful longing to see her that drove me to breaking out of quod. I thought if I could get away and take her to some place on the other side of the herring pond, she and me could make a fresh start. Well, I got out," he continued, with a touch of pride in his tone, "and I risked everything to come down here and see her. I knew I was running into danger, just putting my head into the lion's mouth, as you'd say; but I risked it. And when I got down here I found"—he stopped and turned his head away—"I found that my Rachel had gone."

Jordan still gazed at his boots, wardly calm and indifferent, but his heart was beating nineteen to the dozen, and his brain was hard at work.

"She was gone. That was bad enough, but there was worse behind. My girl had fallen into bad hands. Some villain had—had played her false, and she'd gone off with him."

His harsh voice trembled, and Jordan, glancing up, saw that he was shaking as if with ague.

"That's all I could hear. It nearly drove the state of the same of the

"That's all I could hear. It nearly drove me mad. I couldn't make inquiries; I daren't stop and try and find her. I had to bolt as you know. But I swore I'd come back and find out who it was that ruined her and—well, I've come back. But I'm as far off as ever. No one of course—know anything more than that she went off with some one, and that she's not been seen in Stoneleigh since." He dashed his hand across his eyes with an oath at the emotion which he could not conceal, and looked out of the window.

"It occurred to me," he went on, after a pause during which Jordan remained a pause during which Jordan remained the sight of the familiar handwriting had blinded them.

the ears of a man in your place. I want to find her." He stammered hoarsely. "I don't care what she's done; she's my girl, my Rachel still, and I want her. But I want the man that ruined her worse! I've sworn—look here, Sir Jordan, most good men like yourself, for instance," and he laughed, grimly, "say their prayers at night. I'm not 'good' anyway, and, instead, I've sworn an oath every night before I've laid down that I'd have my revenge on the man that robbed me of my girl. And if he's alive and I can find him, I'll keep that oath!"

He raised his clenched hand as he spoke and swore fearfully.

"That's all I wanted to ask you," he said. "Just answer it, and I'm off. Just tell me anything you may have heard—anything might give me a clue. Why, look here—"and he struck the small table so that the letters danced again—"I'd rather lose the money I'm to get from you than give up my hope of revenge upon the villain that ruined my little girl."

It was at that moment that an inspiration visited Jordan. It came as a flash as most inspirations do, and its suddenness sent the blood to his pale face.

"You will get into trouble, my good Banks," he said, gravely. "You had better forget your daughter and put yourself beyond the reach of the polict."

Lavarick laughed, a gruesome lind of laugh.

"You think so. Well, look here; if the Lavarick laughed, a gruesome lind of laugh.

"You think so. Well, look here; if the man I want was standing with a policyman on each side of him I'd fly at his throat and as I choked him I'd say I'm Jim Banks, the father of the girl you ruined!' and I'd kill him and be hanged for it afterward."

Jordan turned pale, and his eyes hid themselves under their thick lids.
"I—I scarcely know whether I should be justified in telling you," he began, hesitatingly.

Lavarick turned upon him eagtrly.
"You know something!" he exclaumed. "What is it. Tell me!"

Jordan bit his lip softly as if still considering, then he said, slowly:
"I cannot refuse a father's appeal."

Lavarick swore impatiently.
"Curse that!" he said, hoarsely. "Out with what you know."

Jordan rose and looked down at the carpet pensively.
"You say that your daughter's name was Rachel?" he said.

"You say that your daughter's name was Rachel!" he said. "Rachel!" assented Lavarick, huskily.
What is it? What do you know?"

Jordan sighed. "Heaven knows whether I am acting "Heaven knows whether I am acting wisely in—in telling you what I know," he said, "and if I do so it in the hope that I may aid you to recover your daughter—not that you may wreak your vengeance upon her betrayer. I think I saw her but once or twice as I passed through the town. I should not remember her if I were to meet her again—"
"Go on!" broke in Lavarick, impatiently.

"You must let me tell you in my own

"You must let me tell you in my own way," said Jordan, rebukingly, "Did you know my half brother, Neville?" he asked, as if with painful reluctance.

Lavarick started.

"No," he said. "He was at college, I suppose, when I was at home here. I never saw him. What—why—"

"Wait," said Jordan, almost gently. "Wait here for a moment."

He went out and returned after a minute or so with a letter in his hand, down with the gait, and, indeed, the ex-minute or so with a letter in ms name, down with the gait, and, indeed, the expression, of a tiger thirsting for blood, stopped and glared at him.

"What's that?" he asked.

Jordan held the letter firmly.

"I do not know, as I said, whether I am acting wisely in showing you this. I am not convinced that it—er—brings

But I am ashamed to say that my half-brother Neville was as wilful and obstinate as he was vicious. He persisted in his evil courses; a stormy scene ensued between my father and him, and then Neville disappeared. I fear—I greatly fear that he persuaded your unhappy daughter to accompany him.

Lavariek stood white and trembling. "Is this one of your lies?" he got out at last. "Is this a dodge of yours to come over me?"

Jordan shook his head.

"You do right to distrust me, Banks," he said, "but I am telling you the truth. Why should I concoct this story! My brother Neville is doubtless dead, and deed if I did not think so. I should not have a side of the story in the deed if I did not think so. I should not have a side of the story." If the story is deed to the story is dead to the story in the story in the story is dead to the story. "You hate him," he said, hoarsely.
"But that's nothing to do with me. Give me proofs. What's that in your hand?"
"The proof you ask for," said Jordan,
and then, as if reluctantly, he handed Lavariek the paper.
It was an old letter which had apparently been partly burned. The date and the commencement were destroyed, but the body and the signature remained.
Lavarick seized it and examined it,
then he glared up at Jordan.
"It's—it's her handwriting!" he said,
hoarsely. "It's her name—Rachel's!"
and he dashed his hand on the signature.

"You recognize it?" said Jordan, gravely, almost pityingly: "It's a heartrending letter; the appeal of a helpless girl to the man who has ruined and deserted her."

"Where—where did you get it from?"
demanded Lavarick, wiping his eyes as if the sight of the familiar handwriting had blinded them.
