The British Census.

In Great Britain, with its 42,000,000 people, the census (which began the same time as in Canada) was completed long since, and the results as to population were announced several weeks ago. And still later—the returns relating to agriculture have been made public. On these later returns the London Daily Mail remarks: "The agricultural returns for 1900, just issued, show that the decline of British agriculture still pursues its painful course. The area under corn crops in Great Britain, which a generation ago, in 1870, was 9,548,000 acres, has fallen to 7,355,000 acres; that is to say it is less by one-quarter than it was then. The area under green crops has also fallen almost as heavily, while only the acreage laid down in grass and clover shows an increase. In horses, cattle, sheep, and pigs there is a slight advance in the period, but not such as to keep pace with the increase in population or to compensate for the diminished corn production. The English which used to grow her own corn and to feed herself, is becoming each year more and more dependent upon the foreigner.

"That this state of things is not healthy from the national point of view is obvious. A progressive agriculture is essential if we are to have a thoroughly prosperous state. In other countries land is not going out of cultivation as it is in England. But then in other countries the state holds out a helping hand to the farmer and is not content to let him perish. A serious result of the decline of agriculture is the diminution of the rural population. As the city-bred family tends to die out in the third generation, if it does not receive new blood from the country, this points to other perils in the future."

It was a bad day for Britain when at the instigation of men like Cobden and Bright, it agreed to sacrifice its agriculture. And the worst of it is, that the loss to Britain has not been to the advantage of other portions of the empire, but mainly to the advantage of Russia and the United States,—the former Britain's most aggressive enemy and the latter her most formidable rival. But these things can, even yet, by wise statesmanship, be overcome. —Halifax Herald.

Scrofula

What is commonly inherited is not scrofula but the scrofulous disposition. This is generally and chiefly indicated by cutaneous eruptions; sometimes by pains, nervousness and general debility. The disease afflicted Mrs. K. T. Gayden, Union St., Troy, Ohio, when she was eighteen years old, manifesting itself by a bunch in her neck, which caused great pain, was lanced, and became a running sore. It afflicted the daughter of Mrs. J. H. Jones, Parker City, Ind., when 15 years old, and developed so rapidly that when she was 18 she had eleven running sores on her neck and about her ears.

These sufferers were not benefited by professional treatment, but, as they voluntarily say, were completely cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla. This peculiar medicine positively corrects the scrofulous disposition and radically and permanently cures the disease.

This strike fever struck Ottawa and is almost epidemic. Two hundred and thirty-five machine wood workers and two hundred carpenters have struck work because their demands for improved conditions were not granted by their employers. There are about fifty thousands out in the city. The painters of Sydney are also on the war path, having joined the striking bricklayers and masons.
