

Makes a Family Supply of Cough Remedy

Really better than ready-made cough syrup, and gives about 100 doses easily prepared in a few minutes.

If you combined the curative properties of every known "ready-made" cough remedy, you probably could not get as much real curative power as there is in this simple home-made cough syrup, which is easily prepared in a few minutes.

Get from any druggist 2 1/2 ounces of Pinex, pour it into a 16-oz. bottle and fill the bottle with syrup, using either plain granulated sugar syrup, clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, as desired. The result is 16 ounces of really better cough syrup than you could buy ready-made and saves easily $2. Tastes pleasant and never spoils.

This Pinex and Syrup preparation gets right at the cause of a cough and gives almost immediate relief. It loosens the phlegm, stops the nasty throat tickle and heals the sore, irritated membranes so gently and easily that it is really astonishing.

A day's use will usually overcome the ordinary cough and for bronchitis, croup, hoarseness and bronchial asthma, there is nothing better.

Pinex is a most valuable concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, and has been used for generations to break up severe coughs.

To avoid disappointment, ask your druggist for "2 1/2 ounces of Pinex" with directions and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money promptly refunded. - The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

The Heir of Bayneham

—AND—
Lady Hutton's Ward.

CHAPTER XIX.

"Cottage visiting? No, my love, I am too sensitive," said the countess blandly. "I gave plenty away during the late earl's lifetime; but I cannot endure sorrowful sights; they make me ill."

"We will hope Hilda's nerves are stronger than yours," said Barbara. "I do not think the cottages weigh upon her mind; but she is really ill, and should have change of air."

February had arrived, and the snow-drops began to show their drooping heads; still Lady Bayneham and Barbara lingered at the castle. The young earl was unwilling to part with them; he had grown anxious respecting his wife. He could not understand the change that had fallen upon her. The light had died out of her beautiful face, the smiles had left her lips. Whenever he came in and found her alone her face was so sad and wistful that it pained him. He thought her spirits forced, and her gaiety unnatural and assumed.

It was a strange lot that had fallen upon that fair young child, and she faded away under the weight of the secret. The grass was beginning to grow upon her mother's grave, still no hint of it had escaped her, yet its weight was robbing her of life, and hope, and love. She began to think she might be justified in telling Lord Bayneham.

"No matter," she said to herself, "how binding the vow, it could never be right to keep a secret from him." She grew bewildered, and there were times when she could hardly distinguish right from wrong. It was so hard to keep a secret from him when she loved him so much.

One evening Barbara Earle had been singing a pretty ballad, founded upon the story of Lord Burleigh, of Burleigh House.

"I do not like that story," said Lady Bayneham; "Lord Burleigh should have chosen a wife from his own class. Unequal marriages are never happy ones."

Hilda was busy arranging some photographs, and Lord Bayneham was assisting her.

"Is that your belief?" she said to him, when Lady Bayneham had ceased speaking.

"Yes," he replied carelessly, "I am no great advocate for unequal marriages."

"Suppose," she continued, "you had married some one very far beneath you—some one whose name even was a disgrace and shame to hear, and you discovered it after you were married, what should you do?"

Her fair face grew pale as she spoke, and her heart beat quickly as she waited for his answer.

"How dearly you ladies love argument!" said Lord Bayneham with a smile. "Well, suppose as you say, Blue-bell, that I had married some one very dreadful and disgraceful and found it out afterward, what should I do with her? Was that what you asked me?"

"Yes," she replied, and he never saw her quivering lip or noticed her trembling voice.

"Well," continued Lord Bayneham with an amused smile, "of course any one dreadful or disgraceful must be very picturesque to her friends again. The very pictures would start from the walls in horror at such a mesalliance. The Ladies Bayneham have ever been sans reproche. As soon as I discovered my mistake I should find the remedy for it."

He spoke carelessly, never dreaming she attached any importance to his words. They destroyed the last gleam of hope in her heart. She could never tell him her secret, for now if he should know it he would send her away.

From that hour hope seemed to leave her; day by day the fair young face grew more sad and wistful, and the graceful figure grew thin.

Lord Bayneham became seriously alarmed, and summoned one of the best physicians in England to his wife's aid; but the doctor was puzzled too.

"You tell me," he said to the earl, "that Lady Bayneham has had no trouble, no grief or anxiety preying upon her."

"I do not think she knows the meaning of grief or sorrow," said Lord Bayneham, smiling at the idea; "whatever else may ail her, it is not that."

With all his skill the doctor could find no solution to the mystery—no reason for the weakness and languor that wore away the life of his beautiful patient. He advised change of air, and Lord Bayneham was prompt in action. By the end of that week every arrangement was made, and the earl with his young wife had begun the journey that he thought was to restore her to health and strength.

CHAPTER XX.

"The month of blossoms," "sweet maiden May," came round again, bringing all most worthy of note—men of letters, artists, poets, statesmen, beauties and belles—to the great city. London was in its pride. The season was a good one, and every one looked busy, prosperous, and happy.

In the drawing-room of one of the prettiest houses in Mayfair, Lady Graham sat with her friend, confidante, and companion, Miss Lowe. The house was not a grand mansion, nor was the drawing-room one of the most sumptuous, but everything in it spoke of refinement and elegance. Lady Graham herself was more elegant than beautiful. No one knew her age, and what was still better, no one could guess it. She might be looking old for thirty or young for fifty. Her dark hair was as luxuriant as ever; roses bloomed on her cheek and lip; there was light and fire in her dark eyes, and no wrinkle or line marred the pleasant, comely face.

Lady Graham was fairly entitled to be called "well preserved." Why should she be otherwise? Her life had been one calm, untroubled scene of enjoyment. She knew nothing of the darker side of life, though she had a vague idea that somewhere far away from her prosperous, happy world there were darker shades of human life—dim, mysterious troubles that made people old before their time, and brought them to that wonderful mystery called, death. She was the only child of a country squire, and early in life had married Sir Wilton Graham, a baronet of noble descent, and through him was connected with some of the best families in England. Her mother was the daughter of Lord Dalecain of Dalecain, and her mother's family was a large one.

Sir Wilton Graham died, leaving his widow a comfortable jointure; her parents died, leaving a small fortune, and Lady Graham, while still in the prime of life, found herself free and unfettered, moderately rich, liked and courted by the numerous aristocratic members of her family. Lady Graham made no pretensions to intellectual culture. She knew the names of the leading authors of the day, she knew the most popular artists, and the best pictures they painted. "Such things were talked about," and she never liked to be behind. There all mental effort ended; she liked an elegant house, well-filled with pretty knick-knacks, she liked a few well-trained servants, fashionable dresses, and good jewelry all of which tastes her income enabled her to gratify. The one grand study of her life was "comfort." She had no idea beyond it. Her soft cushions and easy-chairs must be of the softest down; no breath of cold, no rough winds must ever come near her. Her table must be daintily prepared, and her slumbers never broken.

In order to insure this continual attention to her comfort Lady Graham sought for a companion. She was not long in finding one. For a certain stated sum Miss Lowe consented to devote every thought to her mind to the personal comfort of Lady Graham.

The ladies had been out shopping and something had evidently caused Lady Graham great pleasure, for her eyes sparkled and her comely, pleasant face was lighted with smiles.

"I tell you, my dear," she said to Miss Lowe, "that I have really never seen a more elegant or handsome man. Poor Sir Wilton had a nice face, but he was not to be compared to him; his attentions were quite marked. Mrs. Henderson tells me he has besieged her with requests for an introduction to me."

The ever-attentive Miss Lowe murmured something to the effect that it was not surprising; which little bit of license being properly offered and accepted, Lady Graham resumed her remarks with the same expression of well-pleased vanity.

"I am told that he is very wealthy; that he made a large fortune abroad, and he goes into the best society, I know. Really I never saw a more polished or charming manner, and such a flow of spirits."

Caped panels starting at the neck line, falling over the arms and finished at the bottom with bands of skunk add interest to a dress made of a Paisley shawl.

Many of the dance dresses being introduced in the Palm Beach collections are made of taffeta. Pleated face and novel beading are other attractions.

One charming evening gown is made of heavy corded silk in ivory tone, with a full-sweeping skirt banded and finished with wide silver lace.

Pork and fowls are at their best during the autumn and winter months, while veal is best in spring and summer and lamb in summer and fall.

Commercial Flying in Canada.

Commercial flying in Canada experienced a period of readjustment during 1921, according to a report of the Canadian Air Board, and many of the small, insufficiently equipped aeroplane companies were forced out of business owing to the cost of operating machines and the lack of public response to pleasure-flying due to the fancy prices demanded. The tremendous interest evinced in flying machines after the war resulted in numerous companies springing up all over the Dominion, and the public at that time were willing and even eager to pay high prices in order to experience the thrill of flying, but the publicity given to accidents shook the public faith in this form of travelling, with the inevitable result that many companies dependent upon passengers travelling for their income were forced to discontinue business.

Great attention was paid to developing aerial photography during the period under review, and this phase of the industry rapidly assumed a position of importance. Many business companies as well as the different governments, engaged aerial photographers to take photographs of their various undertakings. The lumber, pulp and paper companies especially were active in aerial photography, many having their entire limits photographed, and from the prints were able to accurately determine the amount of timber on their holdings, thus saving a great amount of time and labor. In the mountainous regions of British Columbia the Geodetic Survey of Canada was greatly assisted by aeroplanes, which were able to penetrate where it was impossible for the surveyors to go on foot.

In addition, aerial photography was utilized to a great extent for advertising purposes. Well-known scenic and historical points in the Dominion have been photographed from the air; moving pictures and post-cards made from the prints have had a wide sale. Cities and business corporations have also found it advantageous to have aerial pictures taken of their grounds, plants, public buildings, etc., both for advertising and private records.

The work of aeroplanes in British Columbia and Quebec in combating the forest-fire menace is well known to the Canadian public. Canada now has twenty seaplanes and five land machines in action on forest survey and forest-fire prevention. Seventeen of these are Dominion Air Board machines, and eight are owned by private companies. Numerous forest fires have been extinguished before they could get under way and do untold damage due to the efficiency of aeroplane patrol service in reporting these outbreaks, and rushing fire-fighters and equipment to the scene of the conflagration. This form of aeroplane work has proved so popular that additional seaplanes are needed at the Jericho air station in British Columbia to fill demands for air surveys of fire-swept areas, customs patrol, and transportation of men and equipment.

More Workable Taxation Method.

A workable tax for all business in Canada is being sought. A committee has just held a meeting in Toronto with a view to formulating a substitute for the present taxes, business, stamp and receipt. The committee was composed of representatives of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the Retail Merchants' Association and the various wholesale organizations.

Complaints against the present tax methods are numerous. Suggested remedies are as numerous. Each line of business has been affected in some peculiar way. The committee plan of going into the matter was to try and compromise on a scheme that would provide the necessary revenue and at the same time prove the most acceptable to the greatest number.

Nothing whatever has been given out in regard to the deliberations of the committee. The committee has no power. Whatever draft proposals it may make, will have to later receive approval of the various associations. The plan is, that when a tax proposal acceptable to the associations is complete, a deputation representing the same associations will be sent to Ottawa to lay the proposition before the government with a view to securing a revision of the tax schemes in the next budget. It will only be when this is presented to the government that a public pronouncement on what is to be asked will be given out.

Sales Tax Favored.

It is almost safe to say that whatever proposal is made in regard to new taxation, it will not attack the principle of the sales tax. It seems generally agreed that there is no better system possible that will give the desired revenue. The strong criticism of the taxation now in force and coming into force, is launched against the petty taxes which cause no end of inconvenience and provide, it is contended, but little revenue.
