TRUSTS IN A NEW LIGHT RACE OF REAL

A University Professor Thinks They're Not So Bad.

In His Opinion They Are Less Harmful Than Formerly.

Detroit, Oct. 2.-Prof. John B. Clark, Ph.D., LL.D., instructor in political economy at Columbia University, lectured here last night on the trusts. "When it comes to a question of submitting to conditions that are intolerable or attempting to perform feats that are impossible, you will always find the people willing to un-dertake the latter," said he. "But because the accomplishment of a certain object is an impossibility today is no sign it will be tomorrow, and it is possible there may be found a solution of the problem of controlling trusts, even though it has not as yet been discovered.

THE FORCES OF THE FUTURE. "The alignment between the forces of the future is not between labor and capital, but between the chain of remain independent. The solution of the trust problem is based on the graph pole, leaving his ship to be cut principle of taking from them the down by linemen. the result of their experiment, for rarely has a finer lot of exhibits been principle of taking from them the power to crush out competition. The independent manufacturers are able to take care of themselves if left alone, In a fair fight they can win out. But more for them elsewhere to even matters up, compelling the independent even refuse to sell to consumers. It is an open question whether this practice can be prevented. We can forbid it, and we may find ways of thwarting it, but we have not as yet.

CHANGE IN PUBLIC NEEDED. far has been to refuse to buy the products of the trusts, and by patronizing the independent concerns, assist them in crushing out this unfair com-petition. But before this is accomplished there will necessarily have to come a complete change in the atti-tude of the general public." TRUSTS NOT SO HARMFUL AS FORMERLY. The speaker declared it was only potential competitors that regulated prices at present, and it was not what s being done, but a fear of what might follow that keeps the trusts within bounds. On the other hand, he contended that the chief opposition to the trusts came not from organized labor, but from outsiders, and suggested that the consolidation which had been going on might have been beneficial to the workingmen. So far as the masses were concerned, he declared the trusts of the present day were not so harmful as those of a few years ago, when the while prices are elevated somewhat, the great strife in the direction of cheapening the cost of production, thus enlarging the profits. AS TO COAL TRUST. At the close of Prof. Clark's lecture, in reply to an inquiry, relative to the coal trust, he declined to express an phatically that any attempt on the part of the Government to confiscate the mines would be an injustice as they had been acquired by the owners according to law. The law of eminent domain might be stretched a little however, and the mines taken over for a reasonable purchase price, and operated by the Government.

The New Yellow Fever Germ.

S. Cameron, A. W. Smith, G. Hind-

The news comes from New Orleans that the long sought germ of yellow fever has been found, says the New York Herald. We have had so many positive statements on this subject heretofore that it is to be hoped that this most recent claim can be substantiated. So far, however, no very direct information is vouchsafed further than that the micro-organism is of animal origin and has been traced to the mosquito as the host. Such an assertion, if it can be scientifically proved, will be of great value as defever propagation by means of the insect in question. All that has been wanting up to this time is some positive knowledge of the active agency at work in the shape of a germ that can be transferred from the mosquito to man and from the human body to the mosquito.

From a bacteriological point of view these were the only missing links in the most interesting studies of Reed and Boardman, of the Havana commission. It may now be a question whether or not the marine hospital service, by its recent claim, will divide the honors of discovery with those already accorded the army. Practically speaking, however, the mere finding of the germ as the propagating agent of the fever will doubtless not alter the present methods of arresting epidemics. We prevent the healthy mosquito from biting the infected and we kill the insect when it, in turn, becomes infected. As a result yellow fever epidemics disappear by simply annihilating the carrier of the poison, whatever the latter may be. That we may now have found the true germ is a matter for congratulation, if for no other reason than that it has so long eluded the patient research of numerous other investigators.

According to Official Income Tax Returns There Are Only Fifteen

There are only fifteen millionaires in Great Britain and one in Irelandat least this would appear to be so from the official income tax returns

According to the returns these sixteen persons make the sum total of individuals in this country who enjoy incomes of over £50,000, an this is about the "millionaire" level. It is true that there are 184 people with incomes of between £10,000 and £50,000, and, of course, a considerable number of these are just on the line across which they would be classed as Incomes of between millionaires. £5,000 and £10,000 are enjoyed by 424

To be an assessor of income tax one needs a heart of flint. To him the world is a Dantesque Inferno, filled vith delorous complainings. It is always, "The worst year I remember, sir," or "Hard times, very hard times," eyery year sees the nation "on its last financial legs." Unfortunately, the great majority of the smaller income people have no opportunity of pleading poverty. They are people with salaries; and the income tax man has access to the telltale wages list. But the millionaire is not a salaried man. For the most part he pays on an assessment provided by himself, and the above-quoted figures 'give one to think."

Down the scale the numbers gradually increase until of incomes between £160 and £200 there are no fewer than 138,456; while of smaller incomes exempt from taxation there are 112.397 But there is one singular exception to this steady gradation. There are comparatively few incomes of between £800 and £900, the number being 1,989 in Great Britain, whereas the figures immediately above and below are 3,935 and 2,641. There appears, indeed, to be a strange fatality about this particular size of income, for we find that it is rare, not only in the case of private persons, but also of firms, public companies and municipal corporations.

The return gives startling evidence of the large proportion of the burden which is borne by the comparatively poor man. Of incomes between £160 and £200 the gross amount assessed is £25,933,513; of the incomes between £200 and £300 the gross amount assessed is £24,215,614. But of incomes between £1.000 and £2.000 the gross amount assessed was only £2,252,524. It is interesting to note that there are in Great Britain, 86 firms with an income of over £50,000, but not one in Ireland, and that in Great Britain re are 656 public companies, and in Ireland 19, which have incomes of over £50,000.-London Mail.

PINERO'S REPLY TO CRITICAL REMARKS

Being a Letter Written After His Play "The Gay Lord Quex" Was Censured.

To the Editor of the Times: Sir: I observe from your issue of today that Sir Edward Russell has been administering to the members of the Institute of Journalists at their annual conference some grandmotherly admonition on the subject of the drama MANY MILLIONAIRES and theatrical criticism. This would not concern me greatly had not Sir Edward taken the occasion, in enforcing the familiar injunction that writers and spectators should always be on the side of the angels, to declare that my comedy, The Gay Lord Quex, is one which, on the score of flagrant immorality, is deserving of the severest censure. I have not the advantage of being a constant reader of Sir Edward Russell's remarks upon the current drama, but I am aware that his pre dilections incline to a class of production not of late years much in vogue upon our stage. Here Sir Edward has my sympathy, for it must be a sad matter for so earnest and industrious a critic as he has proved himself to be to find in the autumn of his critical life his gods displaced, to see work which he has loudly acclaimed either forgotton or treated with deliberate neglect. What I venture to complain of is that Sir Edward Russell in his chagrin at the mustiness of his ideals should allow his vexation to tempt him into unfairness towards work with which he is not in accord-work, perhaps, to which he brings, almost of necessity, an imperfect understanding. My object in departing from my practice of refraining from intruding myself upon the readers of the press is to challenge Sir Edward Russell to substantiate by extracts from my play (it is published) his charge against me of deliberate immorality. I challenge him to demonstrate by such extracts, if justly made, the "hard vileness" of Lord Quex; I challenge him to show that neither that character nor the play in its entirety displays "desire or preference of what is chaste," that, in short, the play contains "no sugges-tion of any feeling for the right side in life and conduct." That the comedy does not belong to the school of composition which labels each of its characters "wolf" or "lamb;" that it seeks to depict men and women as they are -not wholly virtuous nor wholly evil-I am prepared to admit. But I may remind Sir Edward Russell of the accepted dictum that a man should be judged by the good that is in him; and by this standard the Marquis of Quex is not. I submit, an unamiable personage. Lord Quex will not, I am convinced, be condemned utterly by in-telligent and liberal-minded people because of his lapses—any more than Sir Edward Russell is to be so condemned on account of his present variation from truth, good feeling, and good taste. I am, sir, your obedient ser-ARTHUR W. PINERO. 14 Hanover Square, W., Sept. 4.
