

Only One Poisonous Insect in the United States—It Is a Small Black Spider—Snake Bites Seldom Fatal—Much Depends on Victim's Condition.

"This dangerous spider is chiefly a menace to persons handling old wood, as it is usually found under logs and in woodsheds. I would undertake to go out now and find a dozen specimens in the course of an hour.

"You will say that it is strange that more persons are not poisoned by Latroctes mactans, for such cases are of small size. A friend of mine possessed sufficient confidence, however, in his ability to withstand the effects from the bite of this snake that he deliberately allowed himself to be bitten by one. He experienced a slight fever for about a day and then it was all over. It is very difficult to induce the coral snake to strike at all, as it usually
