

The Colonist

The shock which the news of the sudden death of Sir John Thompson caused was as general as it was severe. No one in the Dominion of Canada had the slightest preparation of what was coming. It was generally believed that the Premier was a healthy man whose constitution fitted him to bear the cares and anxieties and to perform the arduous labors of his position without injury to his health.

It is not difficult to see that what the Department of Marine and Fisheries needs in order to regulate the salmon fishery of British Columbia properly is a more intimate knowledge of the habits of the salmon of this Pacific Coast. It is only when you begin to enquire with the view of placing himself in a position to form an intelligent opinion on the questions in dispute between the Department and the canners, that he finds out how little is known about the habits of the salmon even by those who profess to be guided by scientific truth.

The Hon. D. W. Higgins, one of the Commissioners, who has lived long in the country and has had many opportunities of observation, is of a very different opinion. He says in his report—the minority report—"I am aware that Mr. Wilnot, basing his opinion on the characteristics of salmon in Eastern rivers, believes that the salmon here when not caught or destroyed by accident or exhaustion return to the salt water. My own observation extending over a period of nearly thirty-four years leads me to the opinion that the habits of the salmon of the Pacific coast are not identical with those of the Atlantic side in this respect at least, and that few if any go back to the sea."

Mr. R. H. Hall, who has had many opportunities of observing the salmon in British Columbia waters and knows personally as much about it as any man of his age in the Province, fully agrees with the Hon. Mr. Higgins. Here is the report of what he said on the subject at the conference between the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and the canners, held in the Board of Trade rooms on Monday last:

Mr. R. H. Hall pointed out that all the salmon that go up the rivers into the interior lie. He had seen at the head waters of the Skeena, Fraser and Nass dead salmon coming down the banks. They go up to spawn but none return except the steel head, which was a variety of salmon trout. The Indians had taken them at the head of the river and had water to catch the fish coming down and only the steel heads are caught.

The Liberal newspapers of the Dominion have made such a fuss about the High Commissioner said and did while he was in Scotland a few weeks ago, that we expected to see in the English newspapers full, true and particular accounts of his Scottish tour. But, singular to relate, we do not see the name of Sir Charles Tupper mentioned in the London Times or any other paper in connection with the Forfarshire election. There is a great deal about that election, which was one of more than common importance, in the newspapers, but nothing is said about the alleged interference of the High Commissioner. More than half the long leaders of the issue of the London Times of November 20 is devoted to the discussion of the Opposition victory in Forfarshire, but the name of Sir Charles Tupper is not once mentioned.

"The defeat of the Ministerial candidate in Forfarshire," says the Times, "cannot be attributed to the over-confidence or uncertainty of his party. Seldom has a bye election been fought under conditions more calculated to stimulate political intelligence and to set upon partisan zeal. An unusually long time was allowed to elapse between the announcement of Sir John Rigby's intention to accept the position of Lord Justice of Appeal and the election of his successor. Meanwhile the Home Secretary had delivered a number of energetic speeches in his own neighboring county of Essex; Lord Tweedmouth, another member of the Cabinet, and a former whip, supposed to be particularly skilled in Scotch electioneering, had been constantly speaking, and the Prime Minister himself had expended the advantages of his policy for the special behoof of Scotland in Glasgow." And so on to a better part of a column; but not a syllable about Sir Charles Tupper and the part he is alleged to have taken in favor of the Opposition. The Daily News, the leading Liberal newspaper, equally silent as to the part which he is alleged to have taken in the election.

The Scotsman rejoices in the victory. It says in connection with the Government's policy with respect to the House of Lords, that "it would be difficult to conceive a greater display in the face than this Forfarshire election is to the Government." It adds

THE VICTORIA WEEKLY COLONIST, FRIDAY, DECEMBER 14, 1894

THE VICTORIA COLLEGE ASSOCIATION FOOTBALL CLUB have declined to enter for the junior league cup.

Mr. MARR'S store on Store street was broken into last night. A Sunday morning, and a suit of clothes was stolen. The burglary was effected through the front window.

THE INSANE ASYLUM

Revelations of the Most Surprising Nature Made in the Commissioners' Report.

Cruelities Inflicted in Direct Violation of Rules—Radical Changes Are Needed.

An undefined suspicion that everything at the insane asylum was not exactly as upon the surface it appeared to be, led the provincial government to institute an investigation. The result of that, appearing in the return filed before the legislature yesterday in compliance with the motion on the subject, was a complete surprise, to the government as well as to the public, for while the cruelty now revealed have its roots been going on for a considerable time, it seems like a state of affairs appears ever to have been conveyed to the authorities, no complaint or request for investigation was lodged, and official reports, as will be shown by a supplemental return, were of a reassuring nature, in direct contradiction to the present sworn testimony of those who are relieving the welfare of the inmates.

A committee was formed by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council on the 23rd of October, to inquire into the state of the insane asylum, and the report of the committee, which was presented to the assembly on the 23rd of November, is now being printed. number of the piano. We witnessed one of these unfortunate patients who was impressed with the good order of the asylum and with the efforts of the matron and her assistants to brighten the lot of the patients in their charge. In dull and rainy weather, the former patients also amuse themselves here by having a game of football in the afternoon. The ball is not in place where the non-working patients can walk or take exercise. We were strongly urged that the present closed land as it is, a recreation and airing ground. We think a good deal of labor has been expended upon the medical superintendent's grounds, and that some of this should have been expended upon the grounds of the patients.

tioned keepers one and all say that Schubert was not suicidal. Dr. Bentley could not say as any record showing any such tendency. The slight washman also states on oath that he received no notice whatsoever to Schubert as a suicidal patient.

In our opinion, the case illustrates the danger of the form of mechanical restraint. Punishment was inflicted without inquiry or permission, nor any report sent in until the man was found dead. It seems to us that the facts of the case, as given above, do not support the verdict of the coroner's jury, and it has not been explained to us why no post-mortem examination was made. We cannot explain the discrepancies between these two statements on oath on the part of the coroner and the witnesses examined.

An extract from Mr. Bentley's report for 1892 is given, in which the Superintendent says: "I regret having to chronicle two deaths by suicide. The first occurred on March 15th in a common manner, the patient, Knute Schubert, never having given a hint of his intention. He was a painter by trade, and had been painting and varnishing the wall of his cell upon his order. He was found by the watchman in the morning, pushed from the opposite wall with his feet, and died by strangulation. The other occurred on the 29th of May. David Wilson hung himself with a towel in the lavatory. Coroner Pitcauld had inquired into the case, and the jury brought in a verdict of suicide. In both cases, and in all of these cases, and in the jury brought in a verdict of suicide while suffering from melancholia, no blame to attach to anyone. Unfortunately, the case of Schubert is a case of the kind, and the jury brought in a verdict of suicide while suffering from melancholia, no blame to attach to anyone.

Unfortunate circumstances such as these do occur in the best regulated asylums. They are always numbers of patients suffering from melancholia who leave no doubt in the mind of any one who takes care of them that they will put an end to their lives. These are the most frequent cases of suicide, and it is not surprising that they will put an end to their lives.

The finding of the jury at the coroner's inquest and the statements of the witnesses there examined are given in full. Dr. Bentley says in his evidence that Schubert "had often threatened to commit suicide." At the coroner's inquest, the witness, Mr. Williams, said: "I have often heard the deceased say that he intended to commit suicide." The coroner's jury found a verdict of suicide.
